DR. ENSOR: A man of Interest, Responsiveness, Dedication

Western Maryland College lost a close friend when President Emeritus Lowell Ensor passed away on Oct. 9 at his Westminster home. In his tenure as president (1947-1972), the college enrollment doubled, endowment was increased, and nine campus structures were raised. His warmth and affection for the college and its members attracted many life-long associates both personal and professional. He touched each of us.

One man knew him, perhaps, better than anyone at Western Maryland College. John D. Malaksky worked side by side with Dr. Ensor as dean of faculty for several years. Dr. Malaksky delivered an intimate portrait of our fifth president at a service of commemoration held in Baker Memorial Chapel on Sunday, Oct. 12. We offer here the text of his remarks, given that evening. In this building from this platform, it is surely unnecessary to praise Lowell Ensor. The work of his 25-year stewardship of Western Maryland stands all about us. The measure of this work both tangible and intangible can be heard and read of elsewhere. I prefer to address myself to the nature of the man, as president of this institution. I suggest these words of remembrance, not of major traits but as useful centers of survival.

First, "interest." This is a weak word for the passion that Western Maryland inspired in Lowell, but the word involvement can be involuntary, and concern suggests worry. Lowell's feeling for Western Maryland was spontaneous and his interest was optimistic, not worried. Lowell never liked the location of the president's office in the early years of his administration because he had to go from his house across the road, away from the campus to Carroll Hall. He said he felt he was leaving the college when he went to his office. He was glad of the move to Elderdice because he wanted to be in the center of things, to touch everything that was Western Maryland, and so he did. He touched everything that was Western Maryland.

He was the principal money raiser for the college, as a president must be, perhaps, in a small college. He supervised the budget with exceptional care. He took enormous interest in new buildings, in his practical redesign, himself, Memorial Hall. Recognizing the faculty as the strength of the college, he was particularly effective in raising money and in his dealings with every applicant for a position and in participating in hiring decisions without attempting to dominate them. The Ensors entertained an enormous number of family, friends and constituency. Perhaps because he was by nature an approachable man, a colleague of mine once described him as "easy as an old shoe." This was the result of a warm open manner and a sincere desire to help. He could be irritated, chiefly by irresponsibility, but he didn't let it show. He had a good sense of humor, but he did not joke in a way to hurt people's feelings. He respected confidences. He was a good listener. In response he liked to say "yes" but he could say "no" if conditions demanded. He was never known to say "no" without explanation, and, often, his reasons were so clear and straightforward that the visitor left completely convinced. I do not recall any one who felt feeling that he had not had a fair hearing.

At the base of his responses was a philosophy of moderation. He was a temperate man in every way. Dozens of times in my 20 years' service as dean, when I would take a difficult problem to him and no solution emerged, I heard him use one of his favorite phrases, "Let's hold steady." He was a steady man with great confidence in the future.

His moderation was the result of extreme practicality. Given Western Maryland's resources, mistakes at the top were very costly. He made very few mistakes. Perhaps his philosophy of moderation produced no giant leaps forward in dramatic change at the college. He had the public eye, but one must remember those steady strides forward: the balanced budget; the transformation to physical plant; the growth of the student body — both in numbers and capabilities; the increased capability of the faculty and the steady improvement of the college as an instrument for the instruction of liberal arts education. "Responsiveness" — finding the solutions to the problems of people and finding answers to the challenges of educational leadership—was the third word in "dedicated." Lowell Ensor was trained for the ministry and practiced his profession in several parishes for 16 years before his quarter-century as president of Western Maryland. He did not regard the shift as a change of vocation, and this is what gave him such satisfaction in his work here.

Despite the exigencies of final responsibility, Lowell was not a man for whom one felt pity. Bearing his long final illness, I remember feeling sorry for him only once. This was after a discussion of the Middle States Association in Atlantic City, the council criticized Dr. Ensor for dedication to every minuta of college life, even implying that he was endangering his health. But they mistook his nature. "Interest"...he possessed interest in every facet of the life of his college.

The second word is "responsiveness." Lowell was the easiest man to see of any top administrators I have known. He won national attention in the years of student unrest by clearing his schedule for one complete afternoon a week for any student or group of students to talk to him. Faculty and administrators found him equally accessible. Perhaps because of his ministerial background, he was much concerned over personal as well as professional difficulties among his constituency.

Thursday mornings have become special for area women who are the "pioneering registrants" of a special morning adult lecture series, "For Women, About Women.

Whether they were attracted to the college's series by intellectual hunger, a desire to rekindle the thinking powers, social opportunity, or pure curiosity, they now stand "shoulder to shoulder" in their enthusiasm for the program presented this fall by seven women faculty members at Western Maryland.

The initial program featured Dr. Joan Coley, assistant professor of education, who discussed "What's New in Education?" Her lecture discussed techniques of individualization, and she talked about what teachers are doing with contract teaching, learning centers, peer teaching, and paired learning.

Dr. Mary Rees, adjunct professor of biology, discussed the "Cultivation and Properties of Cancer Cells," in which she drew from her experiences at the Johns Hopkins Medical School where she works as a postdoctoral fellow and researcher. She associated in the Department of Surgery of the Johns Hopkins Hospital Research Lab. Dr. Reed explained how her work in culturing cancer cells to understand their properties could help lead to the discovery of methods to attack the cells. She also discussed outstanding women around the world who are involved in cancer research.

"So Juana Ines de la Cruz: A Liberated Nun of the XVII Century," was the theme of Dr. Georgina River's lecture. The professor of foreign language described the precocious poet who chose to enter a convent at age 16. She had her own library there and kept in contact with social and intellectual figures of Mexico. So Juana's poetry was partly religious, partly amorous, and even reflected such secular concerns as science. When disciplined for the nature of her writings, she openly replied through her works.

The final lecture of the series was presented by Ms. Ann Coffey, assistant professor of economics. Her talk, "The Economy Today" was to-the-minute and paired learning.

Social issues were the focus of the presentation by Mrs. Mary Ellen Elwell, assistant professor of sociology. Among the "Women's Issues in Social Welfare," she discussed ways the movement for elderly women, the role of women on public assistance, women employed in a social welfare system where most top jobs are held by men, and psychological and psychiatric problems of women.

Ms. Marijke L. Baughman, assistant professor of History of Art, lectured on "New Town Design," in which she focused on the new towns constructed in the U.S. during the 20th Century. She described Radburn, N.J., as the prototype of Columbia and Reston, and discussed the work of the designers. Among the outstanding women architects she discussed were Chloe/eth Smith of Washington, D.C., and Catherine Bauer of Berkeley, California.

A lively session on "Women in Literature" was presented by Mrs. Nancy Palmer, lecturer in English and comparative literature. Mrs. Palmer talked about how most world literature has built upon stereotyped roles and images of women.

For example, she cited women viewed as chattels in antiquity, as goddesses in medieval literature, and so on, symbols in contemporary literature. Among the other stereotypes discussed were "Mom," the bitch, the stepmother, and the mother-in-law.

The final lecture of the series was presented by Ms. Ann Coffey, assistant professor of economics. Her talk, "The Economy Today" was to-the-minute and paired learning.

The morning programs have been lively with discussion and the open exchange of ideas. A brewing pot of coffee, fresh doughnuts, and a babysitting service have helped to contribute to the relaxed lecture series.

Hugh Dawkins, associate registrar, says that the success of the series has been the catalyst for future non-credit adult programs.

EIGHTEEN-HOUR DAYS OR RIGHTING OR WRITING

Helen Jean Burn is a workaholic. Or maybe she's just a workaholic. At any rate, Ms. Burn is toiling 18-hour days as she crams into her middle-age years all the writing, research and travel she feels she passed during youth.

The 1949 alumna of Western Maryland College has an infatuation with the communication arts, and is up each morning at 4 a.m. to start the day fresh with some fiction writing.

From her Westminster home, Ms. Burn travels to Owings Mills where she is head writer for the Maryland Center for Public Broadcasting. Every scripted program — from Consumer Survival Kit to Flicker: Arranging — must be approved by her.

Ms. Burn also writes most of the Center's specials, such as "Coming of a Comet," a documentary dealing with the comet, and "Love Letter to Maryland," a film portraying the state's beverage industry.

Evening hours are devoted to more personal writing, and her favorite subject is history.

Happily, she says current free-lance assignments are a pair of historical documentaries for the Maryland Bicentennial Commission and a major oil company.

Though it's taken her almost five months to complete the historical arrangements, she says she's excited about their potential to make Marylanders proud of their forefather's role in U.S. history.

Ms. Burn herself was not a history major, but she claims to now recognize her potential to make Marylanders proud of their forefather's role in U.S. history.

I was saddened to hear of RICHARD GENT's death. June 29. A card arrived June 21, the day after I had heard from another colleague in New York. TOM Sitar. It read: "We occurred to me that we could send you a copy of the first book, published in 1984, which revealed the stories of the children who had been orphaned by the Russian revolution. It is available in English through the Westminster Abbey Press. I enclose a copy for your interest."

Due to circumstances beyond your control (my own), your letter was delayed in the mail. A letter from CHARLIE BISHOP told us of a wonderful trip to the Grand Canyon, where he and his family celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary. The trip was organized by a travel company, and they were all very pleased with the experience. It included a guided tour of the canyon and a visit to the nearby town, where they could shop and enjoy the local cuisine. They had a wonderful time and were very thankful for the chance to share this experience with their family.泡沫 with costs skyrocketing as they are, this column is going on a diet. Only the bare facts from your postcards will be printed. By the same token, if you are not interested in reporting periodic requests for news, please don't send in a card. We know, you know. STAN WRIGHT was recently appointed as an assistant professor in Merrill Land's in the Philadelphia office. Proud father, JUNO WRIGHT says he's about to work for the National Academy of Sciences in Washington. Congratulations and keep up the good work. RE: AMERICAN SCIENCE and SAVAGE, the writing is on the wall. GREETINGS and BEST WISHES to your many friends in the St. Mary's Class of ’55, St. Mary's in Baltimore. LET'S face it, you get them back. We all know that the rhythm and blues aren't buying. With this in mind, we're going to run a few more of the line or two at a time. We're going to try to stay on top of your news.

NOVEMBER 12

SOMETHING I HAVEN'T TOLD YOU
Sometimes I get the feeling that the U.S. postal service isn't as efficient as it could be. I'm always getting postcards that the cards I've been sending out three or four weeks ago have not even occurred in the past two years! What is the problem? I'm going to let you know when I find it out. Meanwhile, I have a few addresses which may be helpful to others.

My type card or letter will only be held at the post office until the end of December. It will then be destroyed. After that time, I will be more than happy to forward any correspondence you may receive.

In September, 1956, HOWARD MATTHEWS went back to work teaching home-room teacher at Westminster School. He was doing a great job of work and study. In addition he continued his career as a professional baseball player. He was one of two players from the American League who were invited to the All-Star Game in July. He was also seen in the broadcast booth and on television. Howie said he spent a good deal of time in the broadcasting booth and on television. He was trying out for the national convention of the American Society of Animal Science.

He sent me word that CHARLES PUGH is director of educational personnel in the Baltimore Public Schools. He told me that he had been in the Baltimore Public Schools for over 20 years. He also said that he had been in the school for over 20 years. He said that he had been in the school for over 20 years. JUDY NORMAN and RICHARD HARRIS are expecting a baby in March. Judy is now attending the University of Maryland and Richard is working as a consultant in the Washington, D.C. area.

JANICE GREENE and PETER BUTLER have purchased a new home in Rockville, Maryland. They are expecting their first child in late spring.

THE Class of '75 appears to have been very successful in obtaining their first jobs after graduation. Some of the graduates who were unable to find work have decided to return to school and try again next year. This year's class is made up of a large number of graduates who were unable to find work immediately after graduation. It is hoped that they will all be successful in finding jobs in the future.

RICHARD WALTERS and JUDY NORMAN have purchased a new home in Rockville, Maryland. They are expecting their first child in late spring.

Is it possible that a basketball game against arch rival Johns Hopkins would be insignificant? "Yes," says Western Maryland's basketball coach Alex Ober. "This year we only play Hopkins once, and that game is meaningless in terms of a league record. It doesn't count toward post-season play-offs."

Coach Ober, however, says, "I don't think this will affect the traditional rivalry which has existed between Western Maryland and Hopkins for many years." Ober is very optimistic about the Terrors' 1975-76 season. He feels that the league realignment is allowing for fairer competition and gives us "a better chance of winning a record," something we have not had since 1964. Last year's captains, Skip Chambers and John Trumbo (also leading scorer), were the only players lost off the squad. This year's captain are Tom Ammons and Bob Kurzenhauser, two valuable men from last year's squad. Ammons is a 6'9" forward who provided scoring power for the Terrors last year, while Kurzenhauser, also a forward, was the leading rebounder.

Also returning are senior John Feldman, who had an outstanding sophomore year and cut last season for personal reasons; lettermen Wayne Coblezt and Gel Fleming, strong reserves last year; junior Ron Anderson, who failed to play last year because of a football injury; and Danil Maggio, a talented transfer student from Wingate Junior College in North Carolina. Many sophomores from last year's team and several new freshmen with high school experience rounded out the squad.

Coach Ober feels that "we will at least have an even chance in our games this year." The split in the southern division means that only the top two teams of each division will see play-off action this year, whereas in the past the top four were eligible. Last year WMC finished third in the southern division, and was involved in the play-offs for the first time in 12 years.

Western Maryland's first home game will be on Wednesday, December 3, against Muhlenberg.

NEWS FROM THEHILL
Several young men and women sit cross-legged on blankets among the fallen autumn leaves. It is 7 o'clock in the morning. These Western Maryland College students are in communion with themselves, each other, nature, and their Maker as they wait for the sunrise in the distance over the roof of Whitford Hall. They worship atop the ridge overlooking the gazebo in the tranquility of early dawn.

Like many campus religious activities, the sunrise observance blends silently into its crisp October Sunday setting. There's little fanfare. A coed strums softly on her guitar and a bird chirps high in the trees near Memorial Hall. A few passersby absorb the scene and walk on to their appointments elsewhere. The service — as other religious programs on campus in 1975-76 — has little formality, little ceremony, little publicity. (Violence, sex, drinking and drugs sell more newspapers.)

"Have you seen Jesus my Lord?" they sing softly as the sun bursts over the Whitford roof. "He's here in plain view..." Informal worship services are held continually on campus "in plain view" for all to see, if they so desire. Students are eager to exhibit their religious activities, especially since misleading press coverage of the college's suit settlement implied that WMC restrained religious freedoms.

An all-encompassing umbrella, the Religious Life Council supports but does not control almost all denominational projects. It is student-run and student-controlled almost all denominations in the area offer communion for students who wish to participate, but is sufficient to encourage members of the chapel committee who plan and direct the entire program.

The students sing together, read from the Bible, and pray. There is no regimentation or formality. This morning, for example, a bright-eyed blonde girl smiles at the conclusion of one song and comments, "That's good singing. I'm happy there are more than just bodies out here." Another student, after whispering at the side with a classmate, strolls forward and announces quietly that there will be coffee and doughnuts after the service to warm up the chilled. Other students join the group. No one fidgets. Everyone listens. Everyone participates. It's their service.

According to Cooney, the chapel committee sponsors, too, other projects for Christian students. During the week, they minister from the Methodist, Episcopalian, United Church of Christ, and other denominations in the area offer communion for students who wish to participate. "We're planning a weekend retreat so that students can get away for intensive study and worship, and we've established a total ministry program where students visit the elderly and sick at their homes," he reports.

Some of the chapel committee's programs resemble closely those initiated by Inter-Varsity, a local branch of the national Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship. Indeed, there is some overlap, and about 20 of the I-V's 60 members attend both chapel and Inter-Varsity functions.

"We split into action groups of six or eight persons," explains Ben Lowe, an I-V member from Glen Burnie. "Each group is given a specific project which frequently involves witnessing to others and spreading the word. We're concerned, too, with the discipleship of our members. We help each other through witnessing to build our personal faith.

"It's getting in contact with God and His word that matters," Lowe comments. What other activities are there? It's possible if you're of the Catholic faith, to attend a folk mass on Saturday evenings. Every few weeks, Father Hugh Birdsall, chaplain for the Catholic ministry and a priest from the Archdiocese of Baltimore, invites a visitor to talk following mass. Twenty-five to 50 students attend. They rap on diverse aspects of the Faith. The group is given a specific role, "Leadership in the Church and World." If you're of the Jewish faith, or merely want to learn more about Ha-Maccabim, a Jewish coalition of approximately 40 students, you attend a Sunday bagel and 10K breakfast or a Friday evening worship service in Rouzer Lounge. This group is small and relatively new, but according to member Joe Stevens, "The response to a Jewish group among the students, in a society which is predominantly Christian, has been sometimes quite enthusiastic and always positive."

There are still other groups, such as the Christian Science informal group, Fellowship of Christian Athletes, Christian Fellowship, and the Barleycakes. The latter organization is an ecumenical vocal ensemble entering its seventh year. Twenty-five men and women sing folk gospel or, if appropriate, folk rock music at churches throughout the area as witness to their faith in Jesus Christ. Bruce Jones, a member of the troupe, notes, "Any church needing a special program should contact the Barleycakes."

"Religious life on campus has improved," says David Janzen, a member of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. "The quantity and quality have gotten better." The small band of worshippers we've been watching is about to break up. They seem to sum up the religious aims of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. They pray in the words of St. Francis of Assisi:

Where there is heat, let me sow love.
Where there is injury, pardon;
Where there is doubt, faith;
Where there is despair, hope;
Where there is darkness, light.

Joan Avey: Everything You've Always Wanted to Know About Everything

Cancellations at the last minute usually turn even the strongest college activities director into a Casper Milktoast, but Western Maryland College's Joan Avey takes everything in stride.

"Yes, I've had speakers not show up to an event after the posters were distributed, the tickets sold, and the audience was seated and waiting," she remarks. Today, a few years wiser, having served as associate dean of students at Concordia College in River Forest, Ill., Miss Avey doesn't flinch at cancellations. Yesterday, W.C. Fields cancelled out of engagements, she noted, "so we got another W.C. Fields today."

The original W.C. Fields impersonator went bankrupt, Miss Avey explained, but she was able to find a second W.C. Fields to act and prevent waste of publicity efforts already concluded. And her second contract even costs less.

Miss Avey's office in Winslow Student Center is rapidly becoming known as the place where anyone can go to find out about anything that's going on anywhere around campus. Official duties assigned to the new activities director include coordinating lectures and concerts sponsored by the Student Affairs Office, keeping a master calendar of all campus-related activities and serving as an information outlet. Proximity to the game room and refreshment concessions has led Miss Avey to voluntarily add a few other services — such as retrieving a lost ping pong ball from within the pool table or settling complaints of machines "swiping" money.

An article in the student newspaper, Scrimshaw, praised Miss Avey for generating an "atmosphere of friendliness" and helping improve operation of the student center.

As Scrimshaw observed, "With all of the above in its favor, the new College Activities Office, its duties and its plans, will certainly have positive results for the WMC students."
William Calomiris, Washington, D.C. realtor and builder, and Jonathan P. Myers, president and chief executive officer of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. Myers, 34, has been nominated for official and non- official assignments on the Board with the understanding that he may immediately join the board with full parlia- mentary powers.

The youngest member of the Western Maryland board, and the youngest in the college's history, he graduated in 1961 from WMC. During that year he was named Assistant to the President at the University of Maryland College on Monday, September 27 in Chambersburg, Pa.

Dr. Margaret A. Waggoner as president of Wilson College on September 20 in Carlisle, Pa.

Dr. Ralph C. John represented Western Maryland College at the inauguration of Mr. William F. Hering of Westminster. Under Mr. Hering's leadership last year, support of WMC by local friends and businesses reached a level of slightly less than $260,000, a record performance for that program. Mr. Hering will be assisted by 13 other members of the Carroll County community. James J. Schwartz, Commercial Manager for the C & P Telephone Company in Westminster, will be serving as vice chairman of this program.

Gerard P. Clark, Jr., has been promoted to Associate Director of Development. Mr. Clark has served as director of annual funds at Western Maryland since 1973. Prior to his work with annual funds, Mr. Clark had served Western Maryland as assistant director of alumni affairs since 1970.

Carl Armack Preston, a graduate of WMC in the class of 1960, will be joining the college as Assistant Executive Director, Development. James F. Miller, Vice President for Development, enthusiastically announces, "We feel very fortunate that Carol has agreed to return to her alma mater. She brings important professional experience which we are certain will contribute to her success in her role."

Since shortly after her graduation, Carol has served as Assistant Extension Service for Carroll County. She is a native of North Carolina, is a graduate of the University of North Carolina where she specialized in the field of business. He has been associated in various capacities with Monumental Cemetery Company since 1949, presently serving as Senior Vice President.

More than 400 new students were among the students attending the annual welcoming program effort for the second year to William F. Hering of Westminster. 1,921 undergraduates beginning their fall semester at Western Maryland College this year.

A new interdisciplinary major program, Psychobiology, is offered to Western Marylanders this year. In addition, new course offerings include: "Legal Environmentalism in economics/business administration," "Ecology Laboratory" in biology, "Energy for the Future" in geology, "Sociology and Complex Organizations" in sociology. Among the other program innovations at Western Maryland is the new program in Science. Designed major and for students whose academic interests and goals cannot be served by an existing program. The college currently offers majors in 21 departments, leading to the bachelor of arts degree.

Spanish teacher turned guidance counselor, Dr. Mary Alice Bolshoe is now masterminding one of the most expensive education experiments to grace Western Maryland College's campus.

Mrs. Bolshoe's staff of five operates from Carroll Hall, where her husband, Dr. Stanley Bolshoe, is head of the education department and where she has served as an associate professor of education since 1972.

The $800,000 experiment, headed by Mrs. Bolshoe, is based on the idea that there must be a more efficient way of serving secondary school student career needs than via traditional guidance approaches. And the professor has spent the nine years working with top- level educators to develop systems that would prove her point. In addition, she has been responsible for convincing the government to help with funding.

The result: Project DISCOVER and CVIS (Computerized Vocational Information System) were born.

CVIS and DISCOVER are a pair of computer systems that can offer high school students finger-tip access to volumes of materials relating to occupations, colleges, technical schools and military programs, Mrs. Bolshoe said.

Sitting before a television-like screen, students are able to narrow their career choices by "telling" the computer (with keyboard language) what specific goals, interest and aptitudes they have. In return, the computer searches its massive data files and provides options for students to explore.

In addition, CVIS can handle adminis- trative chores of scheduling, changing schedules, keeping attendance records and retrieving student records, related Mrs. Bolshoe.

DISCOVER is the new, more advanced sister of CVIS that is expected to be put on the market next year. It features a 22- module system that carries the student through four lessons in "understanding my heritage," "browsing descriptive information," "making specific career plans.

The pioneering for these projects began "over lunch one day" at Mrs. Bolshoe's former school, Willowbrook High in Villa Park, Ill. The year was 1966.

CVIS was originally developed at Willowbrook and intended for exclusive use among its high school students, but CVIS has since been distributed to about 255 schools in the U.S., Canada and the Netherlands, according to Mrs. Bolshoe.

The operating cost for CVIS has been about $1,921 per student hour as compared to an estimated $13 per student hour for one-to-one guidance counseling, reported Mrs. Bolshoe. The cost to implement DISCOVER will remain uncer- tain until after field trial.

Eventually, Mrs. Bolshoe hopes to form a non-profit corporation to maintain the systems. She currently has to rely on funding of $32,000 from the U.S. Office of Education, plus resources from a participating computer firm.

The college kicked in 1896 for his work. Alumni Hall was dedicated in 1896.

Most of the campus criticism, swelling for the past few years and clarified in a campus Long Range Plan in 1973, concerns the inadequacies of Winslow Student Center.

While students at neighboring institutions take for granted their satisfactory lounges, meeting rooms, rathskellers and grilles, Western Maryland students crave the basic furnishings of comfortable daily routine: relaxing with friends in an attractive lounge; chatting with campus visitors in an inviting reception area; eating "live food" between meals at a convenient grille; partying or rapping in multi-purpose rooms that can be used for meetings, frat and sorority gatherings, or games of many types.

The facility was constructed at a time when enrollment was approximately half its pre-enrollment was approximately half its present size. The doorways to the building remain the same 29 inches wide, but twice as many anxious scholars now squeeze through each morning around 10 a.m. to stumble and struggle to their respective mailboxes.

Other WMC constituencies — the faculty, alumni, staff and parents — complain, too, that there is no central focal point for coordinating campus activities or for receiving off-campus visitors. These persons seek a return to the days before Old Main, a center of most collegiate experiences, was razed.

FUND DRIVE PASSES $1 MILLION.

Workmen sandblasted the outside of Alumni Hall during the fall and winter and gave it a fresh, new appearance. The revamping of the exterior will continue for a few more weeks. Photographer Phil Cople captures one crew member, in this photo, at his work. Alumni Hall was dedicated in 1896.

No doubt, spirited Fayette Buell never dreamed of modern development techniques, although he was himself obviously ahead of most mid-1800's fund raisers.) The group, chaired by Richard Ellingsworth and Robert Bricker, has already raised over $1 million.

The campaign is the biggest in Western Maryland's history, says James Ridnour, vice president for development. "It dictates that the college's friends reach personal all-time highs in support."

Kimber Sheehan, editor of the student newspaper, the Scrimshaw, initiated a controversy by writing in the Feb. 5 issue that "the major objection that students have to this new College Center seems to be its location." Her views, based upon largely ecological concerns, were picked up later for wider distribution by the Baltimore Evening Sun.

The campaign to raise the necessary funds on behalf of Western Maryland's world.

While Mr. Jones's opinion on the essence of academia may be debated for years, it's possible that another dream — the dream that a college will adequately support qualifications and social facilities for its students — probably also dates to ancient times.

How can anyone expect to place the universe into proper arrangement without first having a secure perspective from which to examine its environment?

While this search — to provide adequate facilities — that led Fayette Buell to put down $1,000 in 1866 to purchase the eight acres of land upon which he constructed Old Main for 100 boarding students. It's this search, too, that led presidet college officials to raise $1,000 — brick-by-brick — to build a new $2.4 million College Center.

The college kicked off its capital campaign to raise the necessary funds on February 6. The deadline for receipt of gifts and pledges is set at November 15.

Other WMC constituencies — the faculty, alumni, staff and parents — complain, too, that there is no central focal point for coordinating campus activities or for receiving off-campus visitors. These persons seek a return to the days before Old Main, a center of most collegiate experiences, was razed.

C. Wray Mowbray, a graduate and current vice president for student affairs, recalls, "Old Main was Western Maryland College for almost a century. We loved it despite its failings."

"There's no question that a new College Center is the campus's most conspicuous need," says Dr. Ralph John, president. He and the Board of Trustees designed a plan last spring to undertake an intensive campaign for funds.

The facility was constructed at a time when enrollment was approximately half its pre-enrollment was approximately half its present size. The doorways to the building remain the same 29 inches wide, but twice as many anxious scholars now squeeze through each morning around 10 a.m. to stumble and struggle to their respective mailboxes.

The group, chaired by Richard Ellingsworth and Robert Bricker, has already raised over $1 million.

Volunteers expect to raise the remaining money, with the strong support of friends and alumni which has pervaded the years. (No doubt, spirited Fayette Buell never dreamed of modern development techniques, although he was himself obviously ahead of most mid-1800's fund raisers.)

Few of us know what we want to do with our lives at the age of 21 but Kay Barger, class of 69, decided her life objective at age 13 and is now one of the 576 ordained women in the United Methodist Church. Furthermore, she has become a leader in the UM Church. In June, 1975 she became the first clergywoman ever elected a full delegate to her denomination's national legislative body. She will travel to Portland, Oregon this April to attend the quadrennial meeting of the UM General Conference.

Rev. R. Kay Barger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James F. Barger, Sr. of Hagerstown, felt her "call to God" as a junior high student attending a summer Youth Fellowship Institute at Western Maryland. Several years later Kay returned to Western Maryland, graduating in 1969 with a major in Sociology.

From WMC, Kay went to Delaware, Ohio where she attended the Methodist Theological School. While at the seminary she trained as a weekend pastor near Kenton where she earned the nickname of "the lying preacher." After full ordination in 1973 held at the National Cathedral in Washington D.C., Kay was appointed associate minister at Brooklyn in Baltimore where she spent two years.

Now finishing her second year at the Roland Ave. - Evergreen UM Church, Kay is busier than ever. The church's congregation readily accepted their new pastor. They even lowered the pulpit to fit the little 5-foot evangelist.

Amusingly, Kay recalls her first sermon delivered in her own hometown church: "I stood on two Coke crates covered with a rug, and the people thought I was enthusiastic — but I was really bouncing on the crates."

A Little Faith Goes A Long Way

India has been "home" to one Western Marylander for more than 25 years. In the time that John L. Dorsey, 48, has lived in India as a missionary and educator of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, he has worked to establish what is now a successful school whose pattern others in India now follow.

John Dorsey will not tell you what he has done in India. He will tell you "what the Lord has done in Delhi and what we are asking Him to do for and through us." And in this partnership, the story of the Faith Academy unfolds and parades events in the life of Dorsey.

John and Mary Dorsey moved to New Delhi in 1961 from Kanpur, Uttar Pradesh, India, where they had been doing urban and rural evangelistic work, serving the India Bible Christian Council, and editing religious publications since 1952. By 1962 Faith Bible Presbyterian Church was established and a year later, Faith Academy was born.

The newborn Faith Academy had 11 students. At the end of 1975, the academy had 377 students in levels preschool through grade 8 — and a staff of 28.

Dorsey says, "We operate in parts of four rented residential buildings with severe limitations as to space and activity."

But the limitations have evidently been overcome, for the school is now recognized as a Middle School by the Delhi Administration, and former students have been able to transfer easily to other schools within India and in the U.S., England, Canada, and Australia. Full or partial tuition is granted to 95 students.

The story of Faith Academy does not stop in New Delhi's rented buildings. "We are negotiating with the Delhi Development Authority for 2.5 acres of land. Upon securing land we will enter an initial building program in the vicinity of $100,000, and will depend on what we have been able to save through the years and gifts both within and without India. It is a thrill to us that $13,000 is now available within India and that our students, parents, and staff are enthusiastically supporting our Building Fund."

And the story continues. Faith Academy, which plans to begin a high school, has established patterns of policies and curriculum which two new schools, founded independently in other India towns in July, 1974, now follow.

John Dorsey's interpretation does not waver, "As we view our experience, we can testify with Paul that God is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we could ask or think."

WMC's TRIBUTE TO COLONIAL PATRIOT HANSON IS HIGHLIGHT OF BICENTENNIAL YEAR

Board Chairman Wilbur G. Presson (right) confers before the Founders Convocation with Governor Marvin Mandel.

Top—John Hanson Briscoe accepts a posthumous honorary degree on behalf of his distinguished ancestor, John Hanson, at the annual Founders Convocation in Baker Chapel on Feb. 8. The conferring ceremonies concluded an hour-long program of oral reading and music dedicated to the contributions of John Hanson, the first President of the United States in Congress Assembled. Guests included executive officers of the state government and members of the General Assembly, representatives of educational institutions, agencies and societies, college faculty, students and staff, and representatives of the county and state Bicentennial organizations. Dr. Ralph Leeming, assistant professor of history, prepared a 36-page study of Hanson, "John Hanson, Public Servant," upon which the program script was based. The scenes on this page were photographed by Walt Larre.

The Hill

Hoopsters Would Rather Play Than Switch

Western Maryland's basketball players returned to their residence halls after a season finale at Dickinson College to read in the newspapers about the upcoming Middle Atlantic Conference playoffs. So, what is so different about this year than any other?

The Green Terrors rampaged through a 12-8 season, the best in the last 12 years at the Hill. However, they lost a berth in the post-season tournament by a pre-season switch in conference alignment.

"Last year, with a losing record, we were in the playoffs for the first time in a decade," says coach Alex Ober, still a little perplexed at the injustice of it. "This season, due to the conference realignment, we finished third in our division and the other two teams went to the tournament."

While Coach Ober and his players seek solace, Coach Sam Case and Coach Carol Fritz are happy that their teams approached the .500 level despite major handicaps.

The wrestlers, led by senior captains Jed Marmoros and Steve Koster, won 10 of 19 matches, performing against York, William & Mary, and Wilkes, of the NCAA's Division I, and numerous powerful Division III schools, Lycoming, Gettysburg, York and Oswego.

Coach Fritz reports going to practice one day and finding only four healthy women basketball players. Old knee injuries, torn cartilages, the flu, and an assortment of practice injuries had depleted the squad.

"The girls really hung together, though," she says. "They played even better than they had any right to," she explained. Leslie Applegate's 13 points per game led the team to a 6-7 season.

Sickness plagued the men's team, too. A flu epidemic at mid-season may have caused as many as three Terror defeats.

Senior John Feldman sparked the team and led the Middle Atlantic Conference in scoring with a 28-point average. Witnesses attest that his 39 points (a new Gill Gym record) on 15 of 21 field goals against Moravian was probably the finest single effort by a player in Western Maryland history. John's return, after a season's absence, may have been the biggest positive factor in the team's success.

Senior frontline performers Tom Ammons and Bob Kurzenhauser contributed outstanding rebounding and consistent scoring, while aboard Damien Maggio and versatile backcourt mate Ron Anderson added key points and passes to the attack.

Wayne Coblentz and Geoff Fleming came off the bench frequently to spark the team when it stalled.

For the talented team members, the cry of "Wait 'till next year" brings frustration only somewhat tempered by the realization that they provided the Hill with its best basketball since the squad of 1964.

Christmas had an extra special touch this year for Mrs. JOHN C. GARCHIA and her family. Their first snow-covered banner greeted them as they drove by their favorite corner. The banner was a gift from their daughter, Linda, and husband, who moved from Chicago to St. Louis, Missouri, last month.

Some of the gifts included an estimate of prices and delivery fees. HUNTER SMITH returned to the family for a second visit, following the recent death of his mother. He was last seen in New York City, where he went to New York for his studies.

EUGENE LEWIS and his family, who had been away for the holidays, returned to the family's home in New York. They mentioned plans to visit their daughter, Linda, in St. Louis, Missouri, in the spring.

This may be the bicentennial Year for the country, but for our class the big number is 83. We are looking forward to a great Class Reunion. The date has been set for Saturday, June 83. The plans are underway, and arrangements will be made for a grand celebration.

Member of the class, HENRY TURBO AND MIRRI VALLEYS MILLION has returned from a visit to Europe. He brings news of the exciting events that took place, including a visit to the Vatican, where he met with Pope John Paul II.

But it seems that not only did we consider ourselves on the committee to make this a great gathering, but it was attended an alumni dinner in the fall, where we met with 83 classmates. We also welcomed back DONALD SMITH and BILL MARTIN, who represented the club at the event.

And the big reunion date is Saturday, June 83. We hope to see everyone there, including those who could not make it this year. It was a great success and has set the stage for an even bigger event next year. With your support and participation, we can make this the best reunion ever.

This is the year a man always brings much value, meeting a holiday greetings, 1943. I have been a member of the Class of '39, and they make me their leader.

The class of '39 was by far the best class of any year, I believe. They made the difference in my life, and I am proud to be a member of this great class.

SPRING SPORTS SCHEDULE

WMC PLAYERS WIN HONORS

This fall, Western Maryland's sports teams did not win any championships, set many records, or produce winning seasons. The teams, however, continued to yield outstanding athletes who captured awards and recognition for their competitive efforts.

Western Maryland's football team, wearing a 2-6 record, spanned much of its success from senior co-captain Rich Heritage. Rich, a running back, was named to the Baltimore Sun All-State College Team and was chosen as a Middle Atlantic Conference All-Star. He also won the Jim Stephens Memorial Award, a local award given for athletic skill and leadership.

Rich is the only Western Maryland football player to have ever served as captain for two years. Other football awards were given to juniors Don Enterline, voted the team Defensive Player of the Year, and Doug Stimpson, voted Best Blocking Lineman. The Jim Stephens Freeman Award was presented to quarterback Joe Darmano and back Mike Sirbaugh.

Pete Bellave, Bob Kenser, Rich Letzer, Doug Ross, Don Entere, and Dave Dolch were given honorable mention on the Sun All-State College team and Rick Rosenthal was named honorable mention as a Middle Atlantic Conference All-Star.

Dave Dolch and Steve Spinelli will be co-captains for the Terrors next fall.

Western Maryland's soccer team, 4-9-2, had two members named to the All-Star team. Senior Chris Hanroby, goalie, won a spot on the Middle Atlantic Conference First team, while teammate Steve Schonberger was named to the MAC Second team.

NEWS FROM THE HILL

Tom Ammons

Geoff Fleming
Back in the Classroom After 44 Years

Irving R Levine, NBC Economic Affairs correspondent, addressed a Western Maryland College audience on Feb. 12 on "The Economy & Politics -- 1976." Levine, guest lecturer, has reported and interpreted events on television and radio for the past 24 years as an NBC news correspondent. His commentaries and reports have been regular features of "NBC Nightly News," "Today," and other NBC news programs. He has written four books including "Main Street, U.S.A.," a national best-seller, and "Travel Guide to Russia," described by Life magazine as the one essential book for any layman about Russia."Love lives at all ranks," contends the Admiral (Dr. Kenneth Shook) to Captain Corcoran (Don Smith) in a scene from H.M.S. PINAFORE. The Gilbert and Sullivan musical comedy was presented in cooperation with the community in Westminster.

Two members of the community with prominent local television and radio work are Dr. H. Kenneth Shook, previously employed as Dean of Admissions and Financial Aid at the college and Mr. Don Smith, a teacher at Westminster High School. Their roles were respectively those of the Admiral and Captain Corcoran.

Other area residents and students from the college completed the remaining cast of sailors, sisters, and aunts, as well as the orchestra. Bill Tribby directed the acting and Carl Distich directed the music.

Many college students take their education for granted but one undergraduate at Western Maryland is seeing his boyhood dream of a college education come true. David E. Buffer of Fort Myers, Fla., waited 44 years to go to college. Now a junior majoring in philosophy, Dave is "thrilled to be back in the classroom."

"I've always enjoyed reading and learning that the thought of getting a college education seemed impossible as well as impractical."

Dave's family, aware of their father's secret desire, gave him the initial push into the academic world. His son, Steve, surprised him on his 60th birthday with a special gift-enrollment in the area's community college.

A salesman during the day, Dave had his nose in the books by sundown. Attending night school for a year and passing college level equivalency tests, Dave applied and was accepted at Western Maryland.

Raised in Baltimore, Dave spent his boyhood summers in Westminster where he fell in love with the area. Later he encouraged his children to attend Western Maryland College where his two sons, David and Steve, graduated in 1974 and 1975, respectively. While attending classes Dave lives in the same house where he passed those boyhood summers.

His first critical at Western Maryland College wasn't easy. "It was difficult for me to develop good, hard-and-fast study habits," His class schedule included Spanish, Chinese Civilization, Dramatic Art and "worst of all" Logic. Dave chose philosophy as a major since he feels "philosophy provides the basic guidelines for a happy successful meaningful life."

"This success is overcoming the fear of failure. More people should learn to stop and start over again," Dave stresses. "Too many of us are afraid to get out from under the grind of our daily lives. Others use age as an excuse." Dave admits his family's support helped him but careful planning was also necessary. He suggests getting involved slowly. The adjustments to college life were not difficult for Dave. "I was struck by the students' acceptance of me. Not once have I been rudely treated. Both the students and faculty are very great."

Dave is amused by suggestions to "rush" for a fraternity or "try out" for the football team. Even his family limits him on long-distance phone calls about staying out late at section parties. On semester breaks he hurries home to his wife, "Jo" and little granddaughter, Laura Dee.

Even now, Dave hasn't stopped dreaming. He hopes to graduate in 1979 and go on to study for a master's degree after which he would like to teach philosophy on the college level.

NATIONAL REGISTER
LISTS WMC HISTORIC DISTRICT

Ward Memorial Arch and five Western Maryland College buildings are now officially listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

Ward Arch, Levine Hall, Alumni Hall, "Little Baker" Chapel, Garwood Hall, and the President's House form Western Maryland College's historic district which will be placed on the official list of the nation's cultural resources worthy of preservation. WMC's historic district joins approximately 350 Maryland entries presently on the National Register. These include Mt. Vernon Place in Baltimore, the colonial Annapolis historic district, Union Mills Homestead, the U.S.S. Constellation, and many others. Listing in the Register is based upon nomination by the state historical trust and approval by the Secretary of the Interior.

"Listing in the National Register provides protection against government projects which have adverse affects on historic properties," says James Ridenour, vice president for development.

Mr. Ridenour notes that one of the six structures, Alumni Hall, is already scheduled to benefit from a $500,000 bond bill which recently passed the Maryland legislature. In 1889, the cornerstone of Alumni Hall, at the intersection of Main Street and College Avenue, was laid. The building was to serve as a hall for Commencement exercises, banquet, and other social functions. It was designed by Jackson C. Gott of Baltimore.

Through the years Alumni Hall has been used for Sunday religious services, lectures, dramatic presentations, convocations, and musical presentations. In addition, it has staged numerous performances by the National Symphony.

Ward Memorial Arch, constructed in 1896 in memory of the college's first president, Dr. J.T. Ward, now stands at the entrance to the campus on the corner of Main and Union Streets. Presented to Western Maryland by Dr. Ward's niece, Mrs. Ulie Norment Hurley, it stood originally at the entrance atop the ridge until it was moved to its present location in 1937. The sixth structure in Western Maryland's historic district was not added to the campus until its purchase in 1922. Carroll Hall, formerly owned by the Reifsnider family, was used as an inn and an administration building. Today, it serves as headquarters for the graduate and education departments.

TO OUR READERS
Traditions and the individuals who helped shape them are receiving prominent emphasis during this Bicentennial observance. Western Maryland College, as an official American Revolution Bicentennial campus, has sponsored a year-long birthday party with over three dozen programs dedicated to aspects of our country's festival, its heritage, and its horizons. This birthday party ended with the readers on the current activities of some of their favorite Hill people, and to review the multifaceted aspects of our institution. We hope our readers enjoy this examination of the dramatic designation of the campus historic district and the other stories in this issue as we enter the final stages of this year's Bicentennial commemoration.

Of course, for those who enjoy Alumni Letters, this is the issue from which they are traditionally omitted. Alumni Letters will return in July.
Some years are heavier than others. This has been a megaton one at the college. The big difference is in the extra load imposed by the national capital campaign of Western Maryland College. This news event for us is formidable enough, but then there is the additional pressure of the Kragie challenge drive which must be met by a deadline, November 15, 1976, which is only months away.

There is no need to recap the schedules that people—trustees, college personnel and friends in the field—have had to follow. The whole deal is demanding, draining but withal, eminently worthwhile. No one is complaining.

The primary value of this gargantuan effort is the achievement of the College Center itself. But let's put that aside for the moment, as ever so important as it is. The drive has had side-benefits that have been pleasant and that will strengthen the college into the indefinite future.

Looking at it from a personal standpoint, the campaign organization, within the period of only a few months, has taken me twice into most areas of concern—alumni-parent-friend population. I have got to know Western Maryland people, Hill people we call them, much better. That is important for any individual who has leadership responsibility in any community.

It has been with me on nearly all of these forays and now, winding up our fourth year in the President's House, we enjoy the realization that we know you much better. We have new friends.

There is a chance that there has been an opportunity to interpret the nature and program of the college on the big circuit. Institutions, as people change in time. The basics of the personality—individual or corporate—remain pretty much the same, but the particular expression of that personality tend to shift in responsiveness to increased maturity and the demands of new time.

Our meetings have been fun, and substantively (for the discussion parts) unpredictable. Western Marylanders are constructively interested in what is happening on the Hill. Their questions, as literally we have got to talk from sea to shining sea, have ranged across the whole history of the college, as also into every aspect of the diversified school-wide functions. Awareness Week. One of the main purposes of providing activities for the entire college on the big circuit. As such, these forays and now, winding up our period of only a few months, has taken me to Baltimore, Herb wasted no time getting his feet solidly on the ground, as he was elected president of his freshman class and also served as president of the Religious Life Council. By the time his senior year arrived, Herb Watson was a "dorm-held word" around the campus and the newly-elected president of the Student Government Association.

In spite of his continuous active role in WMC's affairs, Herb still views his election pessimistically. He says, "If there hadn't been so many white candidates diving the vote, I would've lost." Adding to his negative feelings, was the fact that his term in office started out in conflict over the selection of a band for the Homecoming concert. According to the Scrimsaw, the student newspaper, the majority of students did not agree with Herb's selection of two relatively unknown, black groups to play for the concert. The total lack of desire and hostility and headaches and made it hard for me to get going," says Herb. "It became a black-white issue, because the groups were black and the SGA President was black. My main objective was just to present a good show."

Even after the issue of the concert had blown over, Herb found few advantages in the SGA President at the college into the indefinite future. The drive has had side-benefits that have been pleasant and that will strengthen the college into the indefinite future. The big difference is in the extra load imposed by the national capital campaign of Western Maryland College. This news event for us is formidable enough, but then there is the additional pressure of the Kragie challenge drive which must be met by a deadline, November 15, 1976, which is only months away.

"Students who regularly attend these events a chance to benefit by collecting a few additional hours towards graduation. Secondly, it motivates those students who never attend these events to do so, at the same time combating the embarrassment that results when a small handful of students turn out to hear a speaker who has traveled 500 miles to lecture at Western Maryland.

Another goal for which Herb aims is to have student representatives on the Board of Trustees. 'We need to be represented because there is an urgent need for more rapport between the students, faculty, and administration.'

Two years ago, in his sophomore year, Herb was instrumental in forming the Black Student Union. "There was a need for it," Herb recalls, "because there was nothing socially for the blacks to get into. We were running back to Baltimore every weekend, but that gets expensive after awhile. So we figured the fact had to be faced that with the money being paid into this school, it seems there should be something for us and the other minority groups on this campus."

The administration says this school needs more black students. The absence of blacks stems from a lack of social life. Nobody is in their books 24 hours a day," he says. So the SGA was formed with the main purpose of providing activities for the black students at WMC. Since its establishment, the SGA has been active, sponsoring various activities for the entire student body, including a Black Awareness Week. One of the main functions Herb hopes for the SGA to serve in the future is the recruitment of black students. "When black students come to Western Maryland they get the 50 cent tour like everyone else, but they want to know what is going on with the blacks on campus. The white student can't give this prospective WMC or the real picture. The SGA can really help out by giving the tours and telling these incoming students what the real story is." Reflecting on his years here, the senior sociology major sees Western Maryland as "a typical small-town college." He feels strongly that prejudice exists. "Students are recruited from somewhat the same background," he says. "They conform to attitudes which have been around here for years. Right now, as far as the blacks are concerned, we don't have enough of the students to effectively make change, but with the entire Western Maryland population working together for the betterment of this school, accomplishments will be made," states Herb.

In the fall, Herb plans to attend the Garrett Evangelical Seminary in Evanston, Illinois.
Seven new trustees have been added to the Western Maryland College Board of Trustees. Board Chairman Wilbur D. Preston, Jr., named the new members at completion of the Board's annual spring meeting on campus, April 9th.

Jonathan P. Myers, president and chief executive officer of Londontown Corp. in Baltimore, was officially added to the Board after being accorded trustee privileges during the fall, 1975 session. Six others, all Maryland residents, were elected, including: Jane Decker Asmis of Eldersburg, Frank W. Carman of Towson, William B. Dulany of Westminster, David M. Denton of Frederick, Mary Todd Farson of Bethesda, and Rebecca Groves Smith of Federalsburg.

Mr. Asmis is owner of Never Die Farm in Eldersburg. She is an internationally recognized judge and breeder of Arabian horses. Her daughter, Mrs. Helene Asmis Clifford, operates an equestrian school at Never Die Farm. Mrs. Asmis is the daughter of former Western Maryland trustee, Alonzo Decker, Sr., co-founder of Black and Decker, and Mrs. Fannie Decker, currently a Western Maryland College honorary trustee.

Mr. Carman is a member of the Board of Directors and executive vice president of the Savings Bank of Baltimore. He is a native of Baltimore, having graduated from City College and the Baltimore College of Commerce. His many civic and professional memberships include involvement with the Mt. Washington Club, Merchants Club and the Bond Club of Baltimore. His wife, Pauline, is a Western Maryland alumna.

Mr. Dulany is an attorney in the Westminster firm of Dulany and Davis. Widely-recognized in the Maryland area, he is a former member of the Maryland House of Delegates, and has been active in many community affairs, directing a recent Heart Fund campaign, serving as vice president of the Carroll County Historical Society, and working as an officer of both the county and state Bar Associations, among his other endeavors. He is a 1950 graduate of Western Maryland with law credits from the universities of Michigan and Maryland.

Dr. Denton is superintendent of the Maryland Schools for the Deaf. His work with the deaf community is well-known, and he served as president of the National Council of Organizations Serving the Deaf. In 1971, Western Maryland awarded Dr. Denton an honorary doctorate for his outstanding contributions to society. He is a graduate of Lenoir Rhyne College and has a master's degree from California State University at Northridge. Among his many community endeavors are memberships in the Frederick Rotary Club, the Frederick County Landmarks Foundation, and the Frederick Bicentennial Committee. He participates on many committees on deafness at a local and state level, and is a member of the Board of Directors of the Prospect Hall School in Frederick.

Mrs. Farson is a Western Maryland alumna from the class of 1948, who has been active in alumni affairs. She is currently the nominee for president-elect of the college’s 9,000-member Alumni Association. Residing in Bethesda, she has enjoyed a successful business career, too, as an associate for Jack Foley Realty, Inc. Her other activities include service to the United Methodist Church in her area, and work for various organizations ranging from the American Association of University Women to the Maryland Historical Society.

The last new trustee, Mrs. Smith, is a mother of three children and the wife of Marvin Smith, associate judge of the Court of Appeals of the State of Maryland. She has actively worked in Western Maryland alumni affairs since her graduation in 1937 and is an outstanding member of the college’s Delmarva Alumni Club. Participating in various groups, she has held offices in the Order of Eastern Star, Federation of Republican Women of Maryland, and the American Legion Auxiliary. In addition to raising a family, she has taught courses in the Caroline County public schools and at Chesapeake College.

Over 45 alumni and friends of the college participated in the Saturday, April 10 classes which took a "bicentennial look" at several academic subjects.
Do you want to grow old? Probably not, but, for better or worse, you can realistically expect to live to age 75—or longer, if you're a woman.

Tenth percent of the nation's population is over the age of 65 and eligible for retirement and Social Security benefits. Law, therefore, has defined "old age" for us and society accepts this incalculable definition.

Until you are a Supreme Court judge, a politician, or the Pope, you will probably face retirement at age 65. Not all people shun retirement, though. Those who dislike their jobs or find their work tiring look forward to retirement and the enjoyment of free time. But people who enjoy their work and find it satisfying tend to want to stay working.

"Good adjustment to retirement is contingent on three factors: sufficient income, good health, and substitute interests for the sudden increase of free time," says Mary Ellen Elwell, assistant professor of sociology.

Mental health, however, is a growing problem among the elderly. People of all ages, including old people themselves, have negative attitudes towards the elderly. Western culture places little value on old age, therefore the old try to appear young and the young try to remain young.

Retirees need to find and develop substitute interests which provide outlets for new expression and lead to a healthy positive attitude during later years.

Examine, for example, the activities of a few of the many retired WMC professors. Frank Hurt, Dr. James Earp, Dr. Samuel Schofield, and many of the retired WMC professors easily adjusted to retirement. Their activities and the endeavors of other retired teachers, too innumerable to completely mention here, characterize retirement as an exciting and fulfilling part of life.

"Pappy" Hurt, former professor of political science and tennis coach, is the epitome of good health. At 76, he can still play three sets of tennis and not get winded. When he's not on the courts he's busy writing the history of Ferrum College, Studivant, now living in Portland, Oregon, corresponds with "never fewer than 125 WMC friends."

Dr. Earp can tell story after story about his former students and has kept his stories up-to-date, including information about students' families and careers. To one of his former students he mailed a "report card" asking how the student's new home was coming along. The card included multiple-choice responses to questions such as, "Is the plumbing in?" "Has the road been paved?" "When do you expect to move in?" When the student failed to respond, Dr. Earp jotted a quick note asking, "Are you still alive?"

"She called me the night she received my note," chuckles Dr. Earp, "and brought the up-to-date on everything she was doing."

Part of the reason why these retirees are enjoying their later years is the sense of accomplishment they share. "It is a very common phenomenon for older people to feel a sense of pride in their accomplishments," says Dr. Theodore M. Whitfield, former chairman of the history department, "and he frightened many a coed with his vigourous lectures."

Dr. Theodore M. Whitfield, former chairman of the history department, demanded a great deal from his students and he frightened many a coed with his vigorous lectures. Today, he is a distributor for Shaklee Products.

As one of his former students states, "He probably influenced me more than any other teacher. From him I learned to think for myself."

Esther Smith, former associate professor in the dramatics department, related to her students in the same way. "She was interested in me as a whole person, not only concerned with developing my brain," recalls a student. "She helped me develop my talents to their fullest extent."

Dr. Frank Hurt is another professor, who is remembered as "a man who would do anything for his students—and the college."

Many students at WMC believe he worked out of generosity and received a yearly salary of $1. Many former students also credit him with financing the building of the campus tennis courts.

But the love of these individuals is not one-sided. As retirees, these professors hang on to their memories of students and enjoy keeping in touch with them. At Christmas, Maudie Gesner, former professor of music, sends a card to students and enjoy keeping in touch with them. At Christmas, Dr. Alfred deLong, moved from Levine Hall to Englar Dining Hall where he works part-time and supervises the summer conference program.

Dr. William Ridding, retired professor of classics, takes time from his world travels to tutor Western Maryland students and return to the classroom to teach an occasional class.

Whether on or off campus, these active retirees from Western Maryland have one thing in common. They are fondly remembered by their former students.

Thousands of alumni across the county mold their lives according to philosophies acquired from these professors.

The history of the school, "he says, Through his catalogue, literary magazines, and other holdings, the college's history comes alive. How else, he asks, can one learn about the school except through the history of the school?"

Dr. Theodore M. Whitfield, former chairman of the history department, demanded a great deal from his students and he frightened many a coed with his vigourous lectures. Today, he is a distributor for Shaklee Products.

Alfred DeLong is still observing the coming and going of students, not in the classroom, but in the cafeteria. Seated just inside the doorway, the former music professor greets the hungry students daily and promotes the "thrift parties over the cafeteria's P.A. system.

"Say, say, say now," Frank Hurt would interrupt during a practice tennis match while coaching Western Maryland's team. "Pappy" can still challenge the best of us on the courts as pictured above by Ferrum College photorapher Ron Bringleton.

A former student calls Dr. Harwell P. Sturdivant (below, left), professor emeritus of biology, "one of the kindest men I've ever met." A past president of the Carroll County chapter of the Heart Association, Dr. Sturdivant still makes friends and stays active with all that association.

As director of Carroll County's Development Commission, Dr. James Earp is to the county's most important salesman. He provides information to tourists and works as county liaison with industries wishing to relocate in the area.
A GIFT AND A RESPONSE

At the request of some alumni in the summer of 1976, the Alumni Association coordinated efforts by English majors, classmates, friends, fellow teachers, and former students of Dr. John Makosky, dean of the faculty and professor of English emeritus, to build a permanent collection of books for the college library. The project was undertaken as a recognition of their respected teacher’s vital contributions over the years. According to the first paragraph of the letter which solicits support for the project:

“John Makosky holds a unique place in the minds and hearts of Western Maryland alumni... Your (the readers’) legacy from support for the project: paragraph of the letter which solicits respected teacher’s vital contributions

...colors, however subtly, your perception and appreciation of the famous Makosky lecture-discussions sprinkled with pop quizzes, subtle humor, inexhaustible empathy, and the numerous fascinating excursions of great minds in great dramas. It is likely also that Dr. Makosky’s effect upon you did not cease with graduation. but even now colors, however subtly, your perception and appreciation of his friends who conceived this tribute: my incompetences. If the courses they contributed to the... the law would permit non-voluntary, positive euthanasia at the request of the next of kin or legal guardian for those unable to speak for themselves and who have not made a declaration of their wishes in advance.

“The grounds for justifying a good euthanasia law are compassion and just plain common sense for today’s world. When a person has no reasonable possibility of ever experiencing happiness or of being service to anyone, society should not deny the peace of death.” A native-born Canadian, Dr. O. Ruth Russell presently resides in Chevy Chase, Md.

FREEDOM TO DIE

Dr. O. Ruth Russell, professor emeritus of psychology, has published a book, Freedom to Die: Moral and Legal Aspects of Euthanasia (Human Sciences Press, 72 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10011). The book questions whether the traditional, ethical, religious, and legal standards are appropriate for our new medical technology.

She argues for the right to each individual to choose whether he lives or dies, urging immediate legislation to prevent both needless suffering and clandestine action.

“Law does not now recognize this right, nor does it distinguish between a merciful act of hastening the death of a dying or hopelessly ill or incapacitated person and an act of murder,” she writes. “Neither or of being of service to anyone, society should not deny the peace of death.”

Dr. Russell proposes a comprehensive euthanasia law which would be permissive — never compulsory — and include adequate safeguards to protect one’s rights to live as well as the right to die. Such a law would provide for voluntary or non-voluntary — not involuntary — negative (or passive) euthanasia. This

How Well Do You Know WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE?

Western Maryland is an independent liberal arts college, founded in 1867. It was the first coeducational institution of higher education south of the Mason-Dixon Line. The college's 160-acre campus in Westminster overlooks the scenic Carroll County countryside and the nearby Catoctin Mountains, yet is only about an hour's drive from downtown Baltimore and Washington. Historic Gettysburg is only 40 minutes to the north.

A major fund drive is now underway to increase campus facilities to include a new $2.4 million College Center.

How much is its budget and endowment?

The total operating budget for 1975-76 is $6.5 million with the annual payroll for the college's 252 full-time and 96 part-time employees of $2.7 million. Endowment exceeds $5 million, with total gift support for the last report period (1974-75) of $867,498.

What about the alumni?

There are over 9,000 alumni from 49 states and 34 foreign countries, many of whom contribute financially to WMC. Alumni give at the rate of approximately 34 percent and in 1974-75, their support totals $304,733.

What are the academic opportunities?

Western Maryland College offers both undergraduate and graduate programs. Beginning with the Class of 1976, the only undergraduate degree offered is the Bachelor of Arts.

On the graduate level, the College offers programs leading to the degrees of Master of Education and of Master of Liberal Arts.

What programs are provided?

Departments in which a major leads to a bachelor's degree are: American studies, art, biology, chemistry, comparative literature, dramatic arts, economics and business administration, English, French, German, history, mathematics, music, music education, philosophy and religion, physical education, physics, political science, psychology, sociology, and Spanish.

Although no majors are offered in the following subjects, courses are given in: computer science, education, general science, geography, inter-disciplinary studies, Latin, library science, military science, non-Western studies, Russian, and statistics.

Pre-professional programs are offered in medicine, nursing, dentistry, engineering, the ministry, the military, law, and forestry.

Education programs are offered in secondary, middle, early childhood, and the deaf.

What about the college's accreditation?

Western Maryland College is accredited by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. It is a member of the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education and the National Association of Schools of Music. The College is also approved by the American Association of University Women, the American Medical Association, the American Chemical Society, and the Council on Social Work Education.

What is the student/faculty profile?

Western Maryland College has a full-time undergraduate enrollment of 1274; nearly evenly divided between men and women. A full-time faculty of 81 and a part-time faculty of 26 combine to grant a student-faculty ratio of 13 to 1. Sixty-four percent of the faculty held earned doctorates.

What is the freshmen profile?

Seventy-five percent of this year's freshmen at Western Maryland ranked in the top 20 percent of their high school graduating classes. Their median SAT scores are 550 and 25 percent of the women exceed more than 100 points higher than the national median score. Students come from 24 different states, the District of Columbia, and 10 foreign nations.

What are a student's average total expenses for an academic year?

The regular academic year for undergraduate students consists of a fall semester, a January term, and a spring semester. Tuition for a full-time undergraduate student is $2650 for the 1976-77 academic year. Room and board is $1275, making the average total expenses $3925.

The college attempts to keep its fees within the reach of families with moderate incomes, without sacrificing the quality of the college program. These charges remain below those of most comparable institutions.

What student activities are available on campus?

Western Maryland encourages student participation in a variety of activities. Extracurricular activities include honor societies, student publications, social fraternities and sororities, and special interest organizations that focus on music, drama, religion, academic majors, professional goals, political orientation, and community service.

Western Maryland also has a full athletic and recreation program. Intercollegiate teams for men include baseball, basketball, football, lacrosse, soccer, tennis and wrestling; and intercollegiate teams for women include basketball, field hockey, lacrosse, tennis, and volleyball.

In addition, the college has four coed intercollegiate teams: cross-country, golf, swimming, and track. About 80 percent of the men and 25 percent of the women participate in competitive intramural sports.

Western Maryland's facilities encourage recreation: an indoor swimming pool, tennis courts, athletic fields, and a golf course.

Jack Day, 63 was in ROTC at Western Maryland and served in Vietnam as a Chaplain in 1968-1969. He later resigned from the D.C. National Guard in order to conduct a memorial service, for Vietnam Veterans Against the War, outside the locked gates of Arlington Cemetery in April 1971.

Among the relics of former years a cap, green, with gold braid; brass emblem still shining in the attic light.

There are no time machines that go from here to there; in the attic light a cap, green, with gold braid; the military crispness of the cap, the profusion of hair beneath.

It is a mismatch staring out from the mirror. The military crispness of the cap, the profusion of hair beneath.

Only a few years, and hat and head are strangers to each other. They touch but cannot meet. Neither would understand.

There was an image about that cap that once meant pride; a feeling, even now, hard to quell. It was a sense of cleanliness, a kind of right. Duty, Honor, Country, sacrifice. That was before the War, before the killing of the children and their mothers' rape before the useless deaths before corrupted allies took their gold and fled.

The cap looked good when hair was short and once upon a time no heed was paid to heads cropped close for appearance sake.

That too, suggested order, cleanliness, and commitment, and no one noticed when the short haired women, freely cutting off their hair freely cut their sense of values too. That was years ago before the War came close before the decade of Saigon surfaced in the lies of Watergate before the creeping cancer distant miles metastasized at home.

Words of hope and betrayal meet in the mirror. Time has brought changes. The cap is still the same.

SPORTS

This spring is about the same for most students at Western Maryland College, although it has been unusually successful for the college golf team. In their first 10 matches, they only suffered two losses by a measurer total of three strokes.

Then, after concluding a record tying 11-2 year, WMC was invited to participate in the NCAA College Division Championships in Springfield, Ohio from May 25th to 28th.

Coach Jerry Wrubel feels that the depth of this team has been the major factor in producing some of the team's biggest wins. A record 18 golfers went out for the team this year. More notably, the top four players continued to score consistently producing some of the team's biggest rounds against Loyola College. The golfers produced a state champion in any sport. This year Western Maryland's basketball team had one of its finest seasons ever, finishing the campaign with a 7-5 conference record and almost earning a slot in the conference playoffs. Part of team's success was due to the outstanding efforts of a few players who picked up many local and conference awards. John Feldman was awarded most of the honors, while Bob Kunzerhaz, Tom Ammons, and Ron Anderson were also recipients of other awards.

Feldman, a senior guard, won a place on the first team Middle Atlantic Conference Southern Division (West Section) All Stars. He topped the league in scoring with 431 points for an average of 23.5 points per game and was ranked 17th in the NCAA Division III scoring leaders. Feldman also made the Baltimore Evening Sun All State team.

Senior center-forward Bob Kunzerhaz was named to the second team MAC All Stars while being selected honorable mention on the Evening Sun team with junior Tom Ammons. Junior Ron Anderson was also awarded honorable mention on the MAC All Stars.

GREENBERG

GRADUATES

Over 400 bachelor's and master's degree recipients graduated at Western Maryland College in Westminster on Sunday, May 23. Joanna Greenberg, well-known novelist and an authority on problems of the mentally ill, spoke at Western Maryland's Commencement.

Mrs. Greenberg, a graduate of American University, currently resides near Denver, Colo., where she is active on behalf of handicapped children and the mentally ill. Her personal treatment for mental illness serves as the basis for much of her knowledge in the field. She has written a film script, appeared on national television, and authored articles in professional psychoanalytic journals on the topic. Her major efforts as a novelist earned her the Christopher Award for literary achievement. Among her best known novels are I Never Promised You a Rose Garden, The King's Person, and In This Sign.

Approximately 200 Western Maryland graduates received bachelor of arts degrees and another 150 students received master of education and master of liberal arts degrees.

BEQUEST

AID

Scholarships for handicapped students will be provided through a $100,000 bequest from the will of Miss Gertrude Giggard, college officials have announced. Miss Giggard died in February 1965, was regarded as an outstanding expert in the field of international taxation and the administration of tax laws affecting United States citizens residing abroad. Her friends, many of whom are Carroll Countians, remember her for her musical talent and her warm friendly personality.

According to attorney Joshua Miles, a friend of Miss Giggard's, the gift will be used to establish a fund in memory of her deceased brother Harry Leister Giggard. The interest from the investment of this money will provide a scholarship or scholarships to handicapped male students who would not otherwise be able to attend college.

WEYBRIGHT

SPEAKS

AT CONVOCATION

Victor Weybright, author and publisher, was the keynote speaker at Western Maryland College's Commencement, Sunday, May 23 at the annual Investiture and Honors Convocation.

A Carroll County native and graduate of Westminster High School, Weybright believes that America and her people cannot live in the past.

"In the celebration of 200 years of our independent history as a country, as a people, it is important to remember that we can never turn the clock back to a pastoral age. Once America was universally known as a country of idealism, and moral dedication. This is the essence of America that must be recaptured, expanded, and serve as a beacon for the future," says Weybright.

The traditional Investiture and Honors Convocation honors the recipients of Western Maryland's major academic, activity, and leadership awards.

Bring the family or make plans with friends. Meals are served in the college dining hall.

Do you need a rest? Western Maryland’s hilltop guarantees therapy for both body and soul.

Would you prefer action? Just a short walk from your apartment—olympic swimming pool, tennis courts, golf course.

Does your family need a time together? How would you like to meet friends and classmates and have plenty of time to visit over breakfast, or after dinner in the evening? All the elements of reunion and more are here.

Whatever your age, you will find much to do. Plan to come early on June 4 and stay through Alumni Day.

SECRETARIES NOTICE
Class Secretaries, Please Note! Deadline for submitting Alumni Letters copy is June 1 for the July issue.
In these days of spiraling costs, tight fundraising conditions, and declining prospective student markets, it's unlikely that Western Maryland College will ever claim to have too much income. Money is too scarce to be taken lightly.

College officials report, though, that contributions to the College Center Fund are coming in more rapidly than they anticipated when they initiated their drive in February. Original plans called for a $2.4 million drive lasting through November to fulfill a challenge from the Kresge Foundation, but thanks to two recent developments the school’s administration is adjusting its sights upward on additional contributions not thought possible until much, much later in the college’s future.

The drive has proven to date that the College Center Fund is too scarce to be taken lightly. Dr. Ralph C. John remarks, referring to the additional $2.25 million milestone at the college’s 106th anniversary.

Dr. John, college president, announced the Decker gift which has pushed the College Center Campaign past the $2 million milestone at the college’s 106th commencement. The campaign, launched by college trustees in February of this year, is the largest fund-raising drive in WMCC history.

Results have been so encouraging that the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees has voted to raise the campaign goal to $2.9 million and to refurbish portions of Alumni Hall, Winslow Center, and Hoover Library with the additional funds. (These improvements were planned originally, but not deemed feasible when the drive started.)

A general gifts phase of the campaign will begin in September so that the remaining alumni and friends can be reached by telephone from all parts of the country. This phase will last through April with the entire campaign to extend through June, 1976.

What two developments precipitated this pleasant situation?

First, a large gift from the family of Alonzo Decker for $16,000 assured the Decker Center and pushed the drive within $150,000 of its goal. The generous gift was announced at Commencement on May 23, in a separate, yet related development, the State of Maryland awarded a grant of $500,000 to Western Maryland on the condition that the college provide an equal amount to cover expenses of altering the interiors of the aforementioned three buildings. The grant, part of a bond bill sponsored in the legislature by State Senators Fred Makus and Charles Smelter, was signed by Governor Marvin Mandel on May 17.

In a sense, we are being asked to raise $2.9 million to receive $3.4 million,” Dr. John remarks, referring to the additional money.

The gift and grant provided an opportunity for college officials to plan for the following specific improvements for Alumni Hall, Winslow Center, and Hoover Library:

- Renovation of Alumni Hall auditorium with the installation of new seating and possibly, a new stage.
- Alteration of the lower level of Alumni Hall to provide better dramatic art department offices, classrooms, and workshops.
- Improvement of the wiring, plumbing, and safety features of Alumni Hall.
- Transfer of the college store and post office from Winslow Center to the Decker Center. (Upon its completion).
- Conversion of Winslow Center into the home of the psychology department and parts of the education of the deaf program, complete with audio-testing room, offices for the staff, laboratories and classrooms; and
- Modification of the Hoover Library’s first floor space presently used for the psychology department in order to have more library stacks and study areas.

If all goes as planned and the additional money is raised, the construction of the Decker Center will begin this fall. In that event, the start of the renovation of the interior of Alumni Hall will probably take place around summer, 1977, as a first step. If anything, the Center Fund drive has proven to date that the College enjoys excellent support from its friends and alumni. By no means, though, is the school standing still complacently. Money is too scarce to be taken lightly.
any people make many different types of contributions to the college. Some invest their lives here, some contribute money, and others make gifts in kind as books, artifacts, valuable furnishings or art. It is really the latter, namely art, that I am thinking about at the moment. Several very significant contributions have been made during the academic year that now is ending. These things, separately and together, have made a difference in the style or aesthetic quality of the campus.

The first was dedicated at Homecoming last fall. It is a mural on the whole of one wall in the Bicentennial Room of Elderdice Hall. The design, entitled "USA 200," is a simple map-like representation of Maryland, superimposed on a larger background, with random symbols of the Free State (oriole, tobacco, Charles Carroll, oyster, Skipjack, and the like) structuring a body that radiates light on the whole scene. It is striking, appropriate and meaningful.

This mural was done by the chairman of the Art Department, Wasyi Palijczuk, and three students: Rickey May, Peggy Powell and Beverly Wilson.

Roy Fender, another member of the Art faculty, with the assistance of a number of students (again in the spirit of the bicentennial) has done a rustic wood sculpture that is behind Lewis Recitation Hall. It stands 12 or so feet high and has 13 logs, one for each of the original 13 colonies. It is Lincoln Log-like for those of you who remember. This is an interesting and imposing piece that adds interest to our landscape.

A very substantial gift in kind was made by Patrick McGuire, a Baltimore sculptor, in the form of five female figures and a duck sculpted in plastic cement. These have occasioned considerable comment, as contemporary art frequently does, and we are proud to own them. These figures have been ensconced behind glass in an alcove near the entrance of Lewis Hall of Science. We look forward to some informal acceptance ceremony in the fall, at which time we shall express our appreciation to Mr. McGuire.

The other new work, one that catches the eye as one enters campus in front of Alumni Hall, stands on the tip of the triangle west of McDaniel Hall and in front of Little Baker Chapel (see photo on cover of the Hill). It is another Palijczuk and is a welded steel sculpture - withal abstract but vaguely realistic. The form seems to have out-stretched arms that welcome all comers to the college, and at the same time point upward in a meditative or transcendental mood. It is a superior piece.

So my point: These people have established a legacy on this campus that enriches our lives daily. They have contributed to the style, the spirit of the college, and in a manner consistent with our character as a community of liberal learning. I am grateful to them. As I am sure many others are. Come see our new art. We like it.
JOAN BERESKA

WHEN THE JOB GETS TOUGH SHE CAN BE TOUGH, TOO

By Joyce Muller

It's a typical day on the seventh floor of 131 Redwood Street in downtown Baltimore. A telegram crosses the desk of Joan Burner Bereska. The telegram, from the government of Taiwan, is a plea for help. The people of Taiwan have constructed a 70-foot-long dragon to send to Baltimore for the bicentennial celebration. After months of work constructing the dragon, the project has run out of money and there is no money left to finance its trip across the ocean to Baltimore's port. It's Joan's job to find a way to ship the dragon to Baltimore without costing a cent.

The mind of the administrative aide to Baltimore's Mayor Donald Schaefer works efficiently and without delay, somewhat like a computer with instantaneous readouts. Joan has to come up with a plan to get that dragon to Baltimore for the bicentennial celebration, and you can bet it will be successful.

"I'm good at my job," states the attractive no-nonsense lady. During a 10-hour workday, Joan supervises an office staff of 50 men and women who answer the thousands of letters and citizens' requests received weekly by the mayor. "The mayor feels that every letter deserves an answer and it's my job to see it gets done."

Joan is also responsible for tailoring the mayor's schedule to fit into a 24-hour day. "My scheduling has made me many enemies and earned me an ill-deserved reputation as a bitch. People can be exceedingly rude and I blame that on myself and someone else. But when the job gets tough, I can be tough, too."

Joan is used to hard work. "My mother and father were strivers. They, like many other parents, worked hard to give their children more than they had. They sent me to Western Maryland, where if anything, I learned to be dependent on myself." Joan graduated from WMC in 1954 with a major in both biology and history.

Through her office, normally college students interested in government are employed in the internship program each year. The interns are assigned special projects and assist in speechwriting and following-up citizens' requests. "Many become disillusioned after working here, especially when they find out that they don't become the mayor's overnights," laughs Joan.

Joan has little sympathy for people who don't work hard and who expect something for nothing. "She has worked hard to get where she's at and 'being a woman doesn't help,'" she adds. "A woman," declares Joan, "means having to work three or four times as hard as a man to win acceptance. I am constantly referred to by men as the 'mayor's secretary,' while women call me by my correct title. I am not a woman's libber, but I believe in equal pay for equal work."

A loyal supporter of Mayor Schaefer, Joan refers to him as the "prime mover" of Baltimore City. "He's turned the future of the city around and has it heading in the right direction. Joan doesn't find working in the mayor's office that easy. "He's a demanding boss. For him his work is his life, and he expects the same from others."

Joan first met William Donald Schaefer 19 years ago when he was a city councilman and she was the assistant director of the Citizens Planning and Housing Association. Later, Joan helped him with his campaign for the City Council presidency. Following the election, she was appointed to be his top administrative aide. Joan works for several changes in the Schaefer administration. "I would like to see the media improve its attitude toward the city's administration. The papers no longer print facts but misinformation and they seldom print retractions when proven wrong. I would like to see the media give credit to what the mayor is doing in Baltimore."

Joan encourages young people to move into the city. "It is the place of opportunities and where the cultural events are occurring." The top aide would also like to change the way citizens feel about their city. "If we could just get citizens to show a little respect and responsibility. Too many of us expect government to do everything. I say, sweep your own streets; don't litter, help us to help you."

Mrs. Bereska's job doesn't end on weekends. Then she becomes the mayor's duty officer and is on call 24 hours a day to handle any phone calls or problems. "I am a woman first, but I have to pretend that I'm not." Her time with her husband, George, who is vice president of American Health and Life Insurance Company, and her son, George, Jr., is limited. "Each day we do find time for each other and we make the most of it."

As for herself, Joan plans to go back to school and "jotle my brain a bit." She had formerly planned to begin a master's program at Loyola College last fall, but on the day of the first class the mayor called and needed a last-minute speech. Joan dropped her coursework and began writing. "I don't think about the future often," she says. "I take one minute at a time."

Alumni Recognized At Annual Banquet

Five Western Maryland College alumni were cited for outstanding service to the college and its Alumni Association at the Annual Alumni Banquet in Engler Memorial Dining Hall on Saturday, June 5. Recipients of the 1976 Meritorious Service Awards were: Daniel Carlisle MacLea, Baltimore, class of 1922; Charles Edward Bluh, Washington, D. C., class of 1926; George Ellwood McGowan, Towson, class of 1931; Daniel Irvin Welliver, Westminster, class of 1950; and Joseph Franklin Bona, Swedenboro, N. J., class of 1926.

The award is presented annually to individuals who render unusual service to the college or the alumni association by helping to maintain class and other alumni organizations, participating in college or alumni activities, and assisting in the expansion of the college's usefulness, influence, and prestige.

WMc'S HISTORY EXHIBITED

"WMC As It Was," was the theme of an historical exhibit in Hoover Library located on campus.

The exhibit of articles from Western Maryland's archives included old photographs of campus buildings, dormitory rooms, and college students in various activities during the years 1880-1920. Other college treasures included class rings, honorary pins, awards, and Indian clubs used during 18th century calisthenic classes were also displayed.

The college archives, located on the first floor of the library, was a 1969 with funds from the Class of 1919.

Four films on deafness have been sent by Western Maryland College to be used in Israel.

Dr. McCoy Vernon, professor of psychology who served as liaison for the deafness program, was selected to attend the celebration, and you can bet it will be attended by the mayor.

The films were produced by Total Communications Laboratory. They include Listen, Swain Lake, Total Communications, and We Tipped Around with Whispersing, which was scripted by nationally-recognized novelist Joanne Greenberg, Western Maryland's 1976 commencement speaker.

NEWS FROM TheHill

Part of Joan Bereska's job as the mayor's assistant is answering and making phone calls (above) for the mayor. When she is away from her desk, she carries a beeper which is a constant reminder of the fact that the mayor's office never closes. Finding time to sit down and talk with Baltimore's Mayor Schaefer isn't easy, either.
A social hour (above, left) preceding the Saturday evening banquet gave alums a chance to bring each other up-to-date and reminisce about their college years. The Alumni Weekend gathering was held at Harrison House, which was renovated on the outside this spring.

Approximately 250 alums (below, left) from the classes ending in "1" or "6" attended this year's Annual Alumni Banquet. Photos on these pages are by Walt Lane.

A Note to Carroll County Alumni, Friends

In order to cut printing costs and avoid a proliferation of monthly calendars at the college, Western Maryland will not publish its monthly calendar of events for off-campus distribution this year. Hill readers will want to check their local newspapers for news of upcoming campus events. If further information is desired, please contact the Office of College Activities, 848-7000, extensions 385, 386.

Another Stel! Born! Bath to the 'fears—winner of more other classes have come to the hill for their election meeting! Thrust members and guests had a delightful get-together, and we are happy to renew acquaintance of a few whose absence of twenty years makes us realize that a few more absentees of the class would make our next meeting more enjoyable.

PHIL MYERS, recently hospitalized, was with us in the middle of the meeting, as well as other members of the class.

Letters from our active days were read and the poor and wretched souls who were in the hospital were given our thoughts and sympathy.

Mrs. Hill is in the hospital and we wish her well. She is one of the most active members of the class.

I am sorry to report to you the death of Mrs. T. V. N. T. S., of Baltimore. A specimen letter published in the Baltimore Sun on February 29.

Col. William Leslie Kepp, U.S. (Ret.), died on April 10 in the Naval Hospital in Baltimore. Col. Kepp, 87, lived in Long Beach, Calif., for many years after his retirement from the Army over 20 years ago.

He served in World War II and was to the Pacific with the Army. He was a colonel in the Army and had the rank of major in the Marine Corps.

Many attended our meeting at Flannigan's on Monday, May 10. Memorial services will be held all the way from Indianapolis, Ind., to be at 6 p.m. at the Memorial Services on Main Street.

Our fifth class meeting was uneventful with only 40 guests at the college. Counting members and guests, the total number of those in attendance at the meeting was 50. The meeting was well attended and there was a good response for our class.

The meeting was held on May 15 and was attended by the Baltimoreans at the home of Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Myers.

We were also invited to a dinner at the home of Mrs. Myers and were given a hearty welcome.

Below is the interesting letter from "B" B. B.

"Dear Mr. and Mrs. Smith:

I am writing to you as a loyal reader of our local newspaper, the "Albany Times." I must say that I am very interested in the articles that you publish in your paper. I enjoy reading about our classmates and their accomplishments.

I would like to express my congratulations on your recent article about "D" B. B. and his recent promotion to chief.

I hope to see you at the class reunion next month.

Sincerely,

B. B."

Exciting things have happened to the people in our class of 1939...this is a good time to say that we may be oldies, but we're goodies.

LUCY JANE SMILEY writes that she was born in Wheeling, W.Va., on Dec. 25th, 1915 and passed her 25th birthday on Christmas day.

RICHARD EDWIN MARSHALL reports that he and his wife are vacationing in northern Canada and are looking forward to a flight to Scandinavia in the fall.

JOHN and Mary OORSEY send me regular prayer requests for the annual reunion and her enthusiasm was infectious.

deeded to bar and return the subscription money to Rollie Qualls in Montgomery, Ala., the president of the Alumni Association.

HELEN MURPHY Reports that she and her husband are constantly planning a trip to Europe for some time in the near future.

She is excited to read that LUCY HOWARD has written her father a letter from London, England, where she is currently employed working for the British government.

1940

SRE PUSEY MARTIN has written to open the old photo album and tell us what is happening in their lives.

She reports that she has been invited to attend a corporate event in New York City next month.

EMILY VANCE writes that she and her husband are preparing for a trip to Hawaii in the near future.

They are looking forward to the warm weather and the wonderful beaches.

dexamed by Dr. William J. Smith, a cardiologist in Littlestown.

She reports that she has been seen by Dr. Smith and is doing well.

ANN HAVOC writes that she is currently living in Austin, Texas, and is working as a dietitian at the University of Texas.

She is looking forward to returning to Pittsburgh soon to attend the annual reunion.

MARGARET MOSS, '43, VICHENZKE revealed that we have a new member in the class of 1943.

We are excited to welcome Margaret to our group.

ded to be in good health and looking forward to the upcoming reunion.

She is currently working as a dietitian at the Kennedy Institute for Research in the field of nutrition.

ELIZABETH CRISP RECHNER, also with GLADYS COPPAGE HENDRICKSON, JEANNE LANG and the only time two have been given. Next month the twenty-fifth anniversary of the class of 1940 will be celebrated.

We are looking forward to this special occasion and to seeing all of our classmates.

1941

By far the most exciting event of the year was the annual reunion in Indianapolis, Ind.

It was a great time to catch up with old friends and to share our latest news and accomplishments.

Some of the highlights of the reunion included a visit to the Indiana State Museum, a tour of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, and a dinner at the old Union Station.

We all had a wonderful time and look forward to next year's reunion.

We are looking forward to seeing many more graduates and their families at future reunions.

Thank you for your continued support and we hope to see you soon.

ALUMNI LETTERS
1946 (Continued)

John and SEEMIE PORTI LONG are now living in Arlington, Va., where John is a pastor. He remembers with delight his time at Western. We were privileged to host a. reunion of his classmates this fall at their home in nearby Alexandria. We were honored to accompany and escort several of their classmates to the Potomac, Md., United Methodist Church where the reunion was held. We were pleased to welcome the reunion as a pleasant interlude. John's son, John S. and his daughter, Karen, are both attending college in Washington, D.C., and John and Seemie have three grandchildren, two boys and one girl. John's father, John, Sr., died in 1945. The family is now living in Alexandria, Va.

RICHARD HOWARD, who retired in 1945, has been living in Seattle, Wash., for 30 years. He is still active in the Methodist Church and travels extensively. He and his wife, Eula, have five children and ten grandchildren. He is a member of the Potomac, Md., United Methodist Church and enjoys reading and gardening. His daughter, Barbara, is a teacher in the Seattle public schools.

From St. Michael's, LILLIAN SINDES MULLINAY reported in a card in March "of no news since the last time we carried on this column." No news was good news. However, she did report that she was still active in the Methodist Church in Philadelphia and that her children and grandchildren were well. She also mentioned that she was looking forward to a trip to Europe. Her children and grandchildren were in the service and with the war over, she was looking forward to seeing them all together again.

I would like to express a grateful letter to Miss Underhill for the help and support she gave me while I was a student at Western. I cannot thank you enough for your kindness and understanding. I will always remember my time at Western and the professors who helped me along the way.

Miss Underhill also taught me a valuable lesson about the importance of hard work and dedication. She always emphasized the importance of working hard and being persistent. I will always remember her words of wisdom and her encouragement.

Our son, Andy, is three and attended play-group nursery school last year. We think he is very much a boy at heart. I don't know if this will change with his growth, but so far he has been very happy and content. We are very proud of him and his accomplishments.

JOHN CLINES, associate director of development at MMC recently served on the program committee for the annual conference of the Association for the Advancement of Computing in Education. The committee arranged the program and made presentations on the conference's themes. The conference began on June 19 and ended on June 23.

MILES GEORGE HARRIS, director of the national library of science, geography and environment, was appointed to the board of directors of the National Library of Science, Geography and Environment. The board of directors was established with the aim of coordinating the activities of the library with other national libraries.

Honorary degrees were awarded to Joanne Greenberg, distinguished novelist and commencement speaker, and Dr. Shroyer, a retired professor of Wesley Theological Seminary.

Dr. Reuben Simon Henry Holthaus, a prominent professor of philosophy and department chairman, retired from the faculty at Western Maryland College at the end of the school year.

"Dr. Holthaus in his thirty years as a member of this faculty has endeared himself as an outstanding teacher and a truly superior human being. He has had much to do with the development of the present educational program of the college. Fortunately we can still look forward to having him around for teaching on special assignments," said Dr. John.

A native of Iowa, Dr. Holthaus attended Morristown College in Sioux City, Iowa, where he earned his undergraduate degree. He continued his studies at Boston University where he received a master's degree in 1934, a bachelor's degree in sacred theology in 1935, and his Ph.D. in philosophy in 1946.

He led the Western Maryland faculty in 1946 as an associate professor and chairman of the philosophy and religion department. In 1951 he was promoted to professor.

Virginia Karrow Fowble and Sterling F. Fowble were recipients of the Trustee Alumni Citation presented by the Board of Trustees of Western Maryland College during the college's Investiture and Honors Convocation May 22.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Fowble have worked with 14-16-year-old boys in East Baltimore since 1946, and have developed some outstanding ball players and young men of character.

Mr. Fowble, a 1936 graduate of Western Maryland, is the supervisor of the accounting department at Bethlehem Steel Corporation. He is the past president of both the Maryland Professional Basketball Players Association and the Maryland Basketball Officials Association.

Mrs. Fowble received her undergraduate degree from Western Maryland in 1939 and her master's degree from Johns Hopkins University in 1967. She is a library specialist for Baltimore City Public Schools.

The Alumni Recognition Award is presented annually to individuals who have given outstanding service to the community.

Peggy M. Gist of Westminster was this year's recipient of Western Maryland College's Community Service Award.

The award was presented to Mrs. Gist at the Green and Gold Dinner on campus. This is the third consecutive year that Western Maryland College has honored an outstanding residence area resident with the award.

The Community Service Award is given annually to "that person who best exemplifies the ideal of service to the community." Any person in the greater Western Maryland College community, not professionally related to the college, is eligible. An independent businesswoman, Mrs. Gist has been very active in numerous endeavors in and around Carroll County.

Several faculty promotions, effective in September of 1976, have been announced.

Promoted to professor are Dr. Cornelius P. Darcy, Dr. Donald E. Jones, and Dr. H. Robert D. Law; to associate professor are Dr. Robert P. Boner, Dr. Stephen W. Colyer and Dr. Howard B. Orenstein; and to assistant professor is Mr. Christian L. Wilwer.

To become a poet doesn't necessitate that you speak in 'trees and thouns,' and thrll about 'daffodils,' says Jesse Glass, Jr.

Jesse Glass and Nancy K. Barry, both English majors at WMC, are sensitive to thees anc tbous.' and trill students of Dr. Melvin D. Palmer, professor of comparative literature at the college, "who is the chief mentor or tor(mentor) of student poets," according to Jesse.

Dr. Palmer encourages the poetic activity on campus and organized a series of poetry readings at Western Maryland last semester which featured both Nancy and Jesse, as student poets, as well as other area poets. During the upcoming year, Dr. Palmer has scheduled current well-known poets such as Roland Flint to teach writing seminars and workshops at the college.

Jesse has read his work at the Peabody Bookshop in Baltimore, a restaurant which features young creative talent, and on WBJC, the Community College of Maryland's literary publication.

Jesse and Nancy began writing seriously in their early teens and are planning careers in that direction, hoping to be accepted in graduate writing seminars or pursue the teaching profession. Their poems have been published in numerous literary magazines including the Wisconsin Review, Aleph, Barrytony, and Contrast, the WMC literary publication.

Jesse has read his work at the Peabody Bookshop in Baltimore, a restaurant which features young creative talent, and on WBJC, the Community College of Baltimore's radio station. He also has written plays for experimental theaters; a novel titled "The Long Heat," which parts have been published, and has printed his first collection of poems titled "Beautiful Teeth," in cooperation with Maryland's Writers Council.

Jesse, currently the director of Maryland's Writers Council Regional branch which includes central and western Maryland, is interested in establishing a center for area poets, writers, and graphic artists. A place where as he describes it, "kindred spirits rub shoulders and generate sparks."

Nancy Barry considers herself lucky that during her early education she had teachers who got her started in writing.

"One of my high school teachers told me that if I wanted to write, I would have to do it everyday."

"Now, I keep a journal where I put down my ideas and begin making verse. Those fragments of poems collect until my ideas are complete. Writing for me is a cumulative process. It took me seven years to write "Family," probably one of my best works," she says.

"I think one has to be sensitive and open to all to be a writer," states Nancy. "It's all been said before" states Nancy. "It is what it is said that's important and this is what I strive to achieve. I want my poems to be approachable."

"I would have to do it everyday."

Jesse compares a poem to a piece of pottery. "Sometimes the pot when finished is perfectly and beautifully done. Other times it is finished, but still has chips and flaws. Poetry, for me, is an attempt to write about my experiences. My thoughts are either perfectly or imperfectly expressed."

Anarchist

we build a hay wall
in the barn
pack each itchy block with the edges even tie wires sling pain
with the fingers dust worms up
our noses
& thickness our sweat
but somewhere we are dreamed about by horses.

From The Journal

"I swallow one more day down into sleep, with all its pictures left unfinished, all its stories left untold, thinking that it's just as well we're left undone to greet the morning."

ALIVE OR DEAD?

By Dr. Ralph B. Levering, Assistant Professor of History

From John Winthrop to Thomas Jefferson and from Horace Mann to Lyndon Johnson, Americans have believed instinctively in the value of broadly-educated education. It is ironic that, as we celebrate our Bicentennial, the concept of a broad liberal arts education has come under greater attack than at any previous time in our history.

Caroline Bird, a graduate of prestigious Smith College, has used the writing skills she developed at least partially in that liberal arts program to question the value of a liberal arts education. Her book, The Case Against College, has been a best-seller and has resulted in favorable appraisals even in some traditionally conservative programs as "Sixty Minutes." In a recent cover story the editors of Newsweek also cast doubt on the value of a liberal arts education; they even suggested that executives reconsider their ingrained "bias" in favor of hiring broadly-educated college graduates in managerial positions.

And Secretary of the Treasury William Simon, another highly successful college graduate, has urged that corporations give financial support only to institutions whose academic programs reflect a pro-business viewpoint. As Simon surely now recognizes, a genuine liberal arts program must emphasize free inquiry, not a pre-selected, closed ideology of any kind. These are just three examples of the verbal barrage (not to mention the budget cuts) which liberal education programs have been taking in recent years.

But, cost-conscious students and parents understandably ask, will this opportunity for personal development during the critical years of transition from youth to adulthood have any tangible value in the workaday world? Unfortunately, there can be no guarantee. But one can be virtually certain that many occupations - the law, medicine, teaching, journalism, the ministry, and top management and technical positions in business and government - will continue to be closed to those without college degrees.

Donald S. MacNaughton, the chairman and chief executive officer of the Prudential Insurance Company, stresses the practical value of a liberal arts education in the April, 1976 issue of Change magazine:

"The ability to think logically and analytically, to express oneself clearly orally and in writing, and the kind of personal value system and broad-gauged, objective thinking traditionally associated with liberal arts training all play a vital role in the business world. The rules and tools of business techniques can be taught on the job, in industry courses, even in postgraduate business studies pursued at night. This kind of supplementary training can be added to the liberal arts education which provides high-caliber executives of great value to business."

Liberal arts graduates have in the past and will continue to play a central role in the professions, in government, and in business. 65 percent of the 1000 executives at Prudential's headquarters are liberal arts graduates, for example, whereas 35 percent are trained in business administration, engineering, law, etc.). But the primary reason for a liberal arts education will continue to be the intellectual, moral, and emotional development of each person, a development whose full benefits frequently are recognized much more clearly a few years after the completion of the exciting but difficult college years.

Caroline Bird, William Simon, and the editors of Newsweek have never said that they made a mistake in pursuing a broad liberal arts education. Students today would be wise to think twice before giving up this chance for personal development before entering the 9-10-5 world.
