Gift Support Tops $1M: Sixth Consecutive Year

When the books closed June 30 on an-Other fiscal year at Western Maryland College, they once again closed in the black. "The year-end balance was approximately $50,000," said Philip B. Schäeffer, vice president for business atfairs and treasurer, "all of which is now being used for some important renovation projects on campus. We are most grateful for the $70,000 increase in the Annual Fund this past year which helped to keep our $10.4 million budget in balance."

ance." Total giving to the college reached $1.232,852, exceeding the $1,000,000 mark for the sixth consecutive year. Of this, $701,847 was given for current operational purposes and $532,005 for capital or endowment funds.

Annual Fund Surpasses Goal

The Annual Fund reached a new high of $444,168 against $440,000 budgeted

Phonathons Planned

The classes of 1972-80 are planning phonathons this fall to encourage partici-pation in the Alumni Fund. Membership in the Cornerstone Club will be a key feature—matching the challenge laid down by the Class of 1981 in Senior

The dates are: November 9-10—Elderdice Hall,

November 11-12—Washington, D.C. November 11-12—Washington, D.C. (place to be announced). November 16, 17, 18, 19, 23, 24—C.&T Telephone in Baltimore, Md. If you are called to help, please respond favorably. You will have a chance to call old friends, renew acquaintance-ships—and fo a great service to your alma mater. If you are not called, but would like to help, just give the college a call and we will provide details. Classes before 1972 will also be conducting a limited phonathon during this same time. Volunteer support is vital to the success of this program.

Non-alumin individuals, including faculty and staff and parents, gave $77,424 of the grand total. Businesses, foundations and other organizations gave $124,303. The leadership of Gurt $124,303. The leadership of Gurt Friends of the College Fund, were all important in these successful efforts. Alumni Fund Sets New Record

The loyalty of Western Maryland alumni was again demonstrated by gifts totaling $241.815. This surpassed the previous high by $21.000. A goal of $265,000 is set for 1982.

Annuities-Unitrusts

The college added one additional Charitable Gift Annuity to its growning trust fund during the year. This was a $30,000 gift from Miss Katie L. Frizzell, '12. Gifts of this variety return income to the donor throughout lifetime, then are used by the college for specific designed

Annual Fund Goal Set $500,000 in 82

WMC is entering the final year of its second Long Range Plan, first adopted in 1972. Plan results have been representative of Ralph John's successful adminis tration. An overwhelming majority of outlined objectives have been met in all areas of college concerns—academic, nancial, student affairs and administrative. 1982 Goal on Target

WMC is now within reaching distance of one imperative financial objective laid down in 1977 at the start of the second Long Range Plan—to raise Annual Fund giving to $500,000 by 1982. To date the college is right on target:

	Target	Actual
1978	$280,000	$330,405
1979	330,000	372,231
1980	380,000	375,288
1981	440,000	444,168
1982	500,000

'The success of the 1982 fund will de-Plie success of the 1302 data of the pend on two factors," according to Pichard F. Kline Jr., '57, chairman of the alumni fund committee, "the degree to which we can raise alumni participation which we can raise alumni participation in the fund and the number of increased gifts we can attract this year." A scale of giving needed to reach the goal is shown below.

Allumi giving to the college has risen substantially in recent years, but the percentage of donors has fallen off as the size of recent graduating classes has increased. In other words, fewer alluminare giving more money. "Giving among the most recent 10 graduating classes is only 15 percent," states Mr. Kilne. "The overall allumin participation is 29 percent, much higher than the national average for private colleges but still below WMC anticipation for allumi support. We hope the challenge presented to us by the 1991 senior class, in which 80 percent of the graduating seniors made pledges to Senior PRIDE, will inspire the entire allumin body." Seventy percent of the undergraduate alumni body."

Seventy percent of the undergraduate degree holders have given to the college at least once since their days on the Hill. Of those who left the Hill before completing a degree, 55 percent have given at least once. "The potential for reaching our goal is there if all of us participate in this important effort," concludes Mr.

1981 Seniors Set Standard For Alumni Giving

The 1981 seniors graduated with PRIDE. Over $8,000 toward the 1981-82 Alumni Fund was raised by the pledges Adumni Fund was faised by the pleudges of 207 students and a matching gift from Random House in Westminster. An overwhelming 80 percent of the seniors contacted personally pledged $4.064.47 toward next year's Alumni Fund goal of $265,000.

ward next year's Alumin Fund goal of $225,000. Inspired by the enthusiastic leadership of co-chairmen Kris Milker, "81, and Rebecca Weller," 81, 100 percent of the seniors attending the kick-off meeting on April 20, 1981, pledged $19.81 or more. The spirit of PRIDE gained momentum during the three week campaign, culminating with a victory celebration on board the Pride of Baltimore, docked in Baltimore's Inner Harbor.

Mr. Eamonn M. McGeady, III, "80, hosted the reception. Baltimore's Mayor Schaefer proclaimed that day, May 12, 1981, "Wostern Maryland College Senior Pride Day," Josinigs in the celebration were: trustees Mr. Wilbur D. Preston, Jr., "44, Mr. Thaddous W. Swani, Mr. Robert W. Schaefer, president of the Alumin Association, Dr. Brantiey P. Vitek, "47, and his generating the proclamation to Try John, and recognition gifts to members of the PRIDE Campaign.

Pledge Early and Save

A growing number of persons are pledging early in the fiscal year to the Alumni Fund or other Annual Funds—and saving the college a significant amount of money in additional mailings and post-

When that first contact for a gift for the 1981/82 fund year arrives, a pledge right away has real benefits to the college," according to James F. Ridenour, vice president for development. "That person is removed from further solicita-tion during the year, saving time and effort for everyone. It also enables a person to spread a pledge over the year if that is desirable—or to tell the college the most convenient time for that person

Almost half of the total Annual Funds come as the result of pledges. The col-lege is most willing to remind the donor of a pledge at a particular time if this is

Giving Clubs Provide Basis of Support

Membership in the Century Club, Century II Club, President's Club and The Founders reached 1,139 in 1981/82. This exceeded the previous year by 59 memberships and represented a solid basis for growth in the Annual Fund this year. "A broad base of donors is vital for any college to meet the financial challenges of the day," said James F. Ridenour, vice president for development. "The rising number of persons who have accepted the challenge of larger support has been most encouraging. As we strive to reach the 1982 goal of $500,000 in the Annual Fund, an increased number of alumni and friends will be necessary. Club membership stood at 957 in 1978. Approximately 1,400 will be needed in the coming year to reach this objective."

DID YOU KNOW:

- Your gift to the Annual Fund helped to:

 —supply additions to the 130,000-volume collection in Hoover Library
 —satablish the career guidance center for students and alumni
 —pay the salaries of the 84 full-time professors
 —purchase scientific equipment to update the science departments
 —provide scholarship assistance to worthy students

- —provide scribinshing assistance to worthly students —assist the athletic program, both intramural and intercollegiate —insure an active schedule of college theater, concert and lecture series —support an extensive computer center, used for both academic and administrative
- neeos
 —maintain the beautiful 160-acre campus including the college golf course and many more items covered by the $10 million-plus budget in 1980-81.

 Thank you for the Annual Fund support. This year the goal is $500,000.

Century Club

The Century Club remains the largest of the Support recognition clubs at the college. A total of 753 alumni, perents, friends and businesses supported the Annual Fund with gifts of $100.249 in 1980-81. Benefits include admis-sion to all college athletic events and use of li-brary, Century Club Newsletter, President's Dinner invitation, as well as the satisfaction of significantly alling Western Maryland College.

The Founders

Since its inception in 1976. The Founders has represented the backbone of financial support to Western Maryland College. This year 153 members gave $1,000 or more, many substantially more so that their total support exceeded $500,000. This is a growth of 13 members within this group who have played a key role in meeting the cost spiral.

Parents Fund

Parents provide the all important ingredient for a college—the well qualified student. Many also went the extra mile to provide additional financial assistance. Under the leadership of Chairman Curl Brandland and the Parents Board, a total of 584 parents made gifts of $33,089 to the Annual Fund. This exceeded the previous year support by almost $10,000.

Alumni loyalty is expressed in many ways at VMC—the large class reunions, the alumni letters columns, the club meelings across the country, Strong financial support has long been a very tangible way of expressing the continued interest left by the alumni family. The Alumni Fund set a new record of giving in 1980-81 with $244,814 received from 3,259 donors. This represents a 10 percent increase over a record gift total the previous year. Over 500 chairmen, agents and phoners helped to bring in this banner year.

Rehabilitating America, a book by Frank Bowe, 69, calls for us as a society to alter our treat-ment of the aged and handrapped so that we read to the second of the second of the to take disabled citizens from societal depen-dence to independence based on their abilities rather than their inabilities.

The five steps, briefly, call for expanded research and development; removal of architectural, transportation and communication bar-riers, training the disabled and elderly, reforma-tion of dependence-oriented programs; and making communities "open" and usable for dis-abled and elderly citizens. According to Bowe, implementation of his plan will cost $22 billion annually. He contrasts that cost with a figure of $150 billion a year without the plan, saying "these government and private expenditures, tost wages and other costs will consume more than one thousand billion dollars, or $1 trillion by 1990."

by 1990."
Bowe lives on Long Island with his wife, Phyllis, and their daughters, Doran and Whit-ney, He is director of the American Coalition of Citizens with Disabilities and serves as the United States Representative to the United As-tions for the International Year of Disabled Per-sons (1981). Rehabilitating America, published by Harper and Row in February 1980, is availa-ble in hardback for $10.95.

WMC Publishes History

This winter the college development office will publish WESTERN MARYLAND COLLEGE: THE FORMATIVE YEARS 1886-1947, a 150-page, illustrated book that chronicles the history of Western Maryland.

This comprehensive portrait of the college's first 80 years illustrates its history, achievements and people as thoughtfully and beautifully written by Dr. Samuel B. Schoffeld and Mrs. Charles E. (Marjorie) Crain. Highlighted in this distinctive history are the founders' aspirations, physical growth and anniversaries.

Alumni and friends of the college making pledges to the 1981/ 82 Annual Fund will receive a copy of the published history. For more information call the development office at 848-7000 ext. 250.

Published for friends of Western Maryland College, Westminster, Maryland

AT HOME IN THE COMMUNITY

By Sherri Linkoff, '82

t is 8 a.m. on a Saturday morning. Most people are still in bed recovering from the effects of an active work week; Ray Stevens, however, is awake and preparing his plan for the soccer game of the season The results of the game could be devastating. The question is, who will be more devastated, the players, or their parents? Dr. Stevens coaches a youth soccer team, and while his teams "haven't always won, they do speak the best English!

While Ray Stevens, a professor of English at WMC, is at home amid volumes of English literature and at ease leading a discussion of Charles Dickens, he looks equally natural giving soccer signals to the neighborhood kids. That's because Stevens is a full-fledged citizen of both the college and the community.

"Participation in the total community is the basic meaning of citizenship," said Stevens, explaining a philosophy which backs his dedication at work and at home. "I hold a distinct belief in the three-fold commitment of the instructor in a liberal arts college in a small town." Continuing, he added, "There is a commitment to the college community, to professional activities, and to the community. Stevens by his example is a literal extension of the college's newly formulated philosophy,

First Principles ("This Campus Is Not Two Worlds," The Hill, Dec. 1981).

"I'm basically service oriented," says Stevens, whose list of community activities over the years has included preaching, serving on the Carroll County Red Cross Board of Directors, organizing Circle K clubs sponsored by the Kiwanis, and serving as PTA president at his sons' school. Many of his community activities spill over the boundaries of the college and into campus life. For example, he helped to establish a Circle K service club for stu dents at the college and also worked to organize student involvement in the blood drives. Perhaps when Stevens speaks of "total community" he means this overlapping of campus life with off-campus life

Interested in people, and especially kids, Stevens forwards his time and effort to them-whether they are college students or local children. "My most frustrating moments." he commented, "occur when I see parents partially destroy their children psy chologically by their intolerance or by lack of concern or by neglect." He avoids this himself by participating in sports with his own sons. who are 12 and 16. "I have always liked to see the sorts of things boys my sons' ages have on their minds

While much of his work with children is on a one to one basis, a lot of his time is spent working with local recreational councils. As chairman of the board of directors of the

Carroll County Department of Recreation and Parks, he is currently working on what he labels his "pet project." The 10-year effort to establish a park for the children of the Sandymount area is finally becoming a reality. Funds given by the county will be used to develop tennis courts, basketball courts, a multipurpose athletic playing field, and a large play area with gymnastic equipment for children. "In many respects, when it is completed, I will get more personal satisfaction than I do from my more specialized scholarly research because of its potential benefits to generations of people," he said.

Dr. Stevens is dedicated to helping people both in the community and at the college. During the day. Monday though Friday, he is devoted to his students. Evenings and weekends are divided among family life, coaching, and board meetings. Although he must carefully budget his time, "Ray was totally committed, he never gave us less than 110 percent," according to a parent of one of his soccer players. Mike Naylor, one of his players, in summing up his feelings said, "He worked hard for us so we worked harder for him. He never criticized, just told us to try to do better." And working hard to better his community is exactly what Stevens does.

"Study with the best." This motto, found on promotional pamphlets about the college, well describes the members of the WMC community. Listed below are just a few of the many faculty and staff members who, the Stevens, have carried a spot on the community involvement honor roll.

Mary Ellen Elwell, associate professor of sociology, is a member of the Carroll County Sexual Assaut Service. This work involves and public speaking. On call 24 hours a day, Elwell heads for the hospital immediately on request.

Ronald Tait, assistant professor of sociology, is involved with FISH (a program set up to provide emergency services to people in need) and Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Central Maryland. The latent function of his community work, according to Tait who spends up to four hours a week with his "little brother." is to keep in contact with the community, helping people to deal with their problems."

Helen Wolfe, assistant professor of education, is on the board of directors of the Carroll County Women's Center. The center answers the needs of women in Carroll County by helping them seek jobs, offering education workshops and most jobs, offering education workshops and more important, providing a place for women to congre gate. Her gratification stems from "being able to serve a whole host of needs to women of the community.

Tim Weinfield, associate professor of dramatic art, is serving as coordinator of a county-wide talent show in support of the Senior Overland Service (SOS), SOS is a transportation service provided to the county's elderly, enabling them to be self-sufficient. He has been involved with severa other fundraising events for Carroll County including serving one year as director for an annual dramatic production to be nefit the Carroll County Association of Retarded Citizens. have worked with the Tip-Off Tournament, a basketball event to promote interaction between college and community, and such services as fundraisers for Carroll County General Hospital, the local YMCA and the Babe Ruth League.

James Ridenour, vice president for development, has been a member of fixwanis, a national organization dedicated to community service, for 11 years. He is also senior warden of his church, committee chairman for his son's Boy Scout troop, and serves on the YMCA and Heart Association and arranged to visit him one attendor that week.

Our first afternoon together passed uneventfully. We spent a couple of hours entertaining ourselves at a local playground. As any youngster might, Rusty expressed a keen interest in my 10 speed bike. Despite his pleas and a detailed description of his riding skills, detailed description of ins inding same. I held to my explanation that "Rusty, I really think you are too small to ride my bike. You might fall off and hurt yourself." (Not to mention what you might do to the bike!) Rusty didn't care much for my logic, but although he often questioned me to see if this policy had changed, he soon accepted it with a minimum of debate

We had a pretty dependable routine throughout that first year. He never seemed to have much homework so we seemed to have much nonework so we spent most of our time playing near his house or at the playground. Occasion-ally we would walk over to Main Street to windowshop at Bobby's Hobby Lobby Locust Lane Mall. I guess our relation-ship was as good as any between a college student and a sixth grader. Rusty seemed to have a storehouse of energy. but he didn't quite know how to let it out. His temperament was often moody and always stubborn. But he was also a clever kid, and that made for some interesting afternoons.

Rusty especially liked visiting the college. He received a lot of attention college. He received a lot of attention from my floormates and always put on a good show. A tough cookle to the end, Rusty wasn't about to be intimidated by a roomful of college students twice his size. He took their friendly barbs and returned a few of his own before darting off on one of his spontaneous games of hide and seek. I often worried that he would discover some trouble when he was off on his own in the dorm and sometimes he seemed to detect and resent this concern. Maybe he viewed it as a lack of trust. In any event, I found that as I stopped worrying about where he was going, he began to lose interest in getting there. It wasn't a big thing, but it was a subtle sign that our rela-tionship was growing more secure.

tionship was growing more secure. Hinge hasn't taught me any profound lessons about human nature or any-thing like that. I've just had the chance to share some good and not so good experiences with a very special group of young people whom I like to think of as my friends. To most WMC students, the Hinge children might appear to be little more than an unruly bunch of kids who visit the college center game room on weekday afternoons. I'm glad I have had the opportunity to know otherwise

s the 1880's began, the need for additional dormitory space be came apparent and the Trustees approved a plan for a new building to accommodate male students on the we side of the existing College Building. The President was authorized to erect "a building such as can be put under roof for the money already raised ($934) and continue the effort to raise more money, finishing portion by portion according to the means received

On August 21, 1882, the cornerstone of the new building was set in place. The simple ceremony was attended by only about a dozen persons, since it had not been announced as a public occasion, but as reported in the Democratic Advocate of August 25, 1882, it was a moving one:

Dr. J. T. Murray... in the name of the Holy Trinity poured a bottle of water upon the foundation stone, giving the building a distinctive title. As agreed by the Trustees present, in honor of the President of the College, it was given the name of Ward Hall. As the intention of the well-deserved compliment was kept secret, its sudden revelation had a peculiar effect upon the President. It was an electric disturbance to his com posure, and greatly enjoyed by those who had planned to fix an honor upon him, against which he would have protested if he had not been caught with guile.

Progress on Ward Hall was slow because work had to be discontinued for a while. Totaling his receipts for the project in September, Dr. Ward reported contributions of only $1,100, one-third of which he had given himself. The urgent need for student rooms, how ever, caused him to go ahead in spite of the limitation put upon him by the trustees and in February. 1883, he was able to report that the Half-section of Ward Hall had been completed and was ready for occupancy. The total cost of the building, including all expenses except the furnace and the plastering, was $3,353.39. It was all paid for by October, 1884 Fire was kindled in the furnace of the new building on December 7, 1882. The president was delighted to find that it made the entire Half-section as comfortable as summer

Other conveniences began to follow. Most important was the advent of running water with all its blessings. In September 1883, water pipes were run from the city water works to the college buildings and by Novem ber they went as high as the second story of both the Main Building and Ward Hall. A report of the Local Committee to the Board of Trustees dated June 20, 1883, states that "the quality of water is all that could be desired. and the reservoir will be on a level with the cupola of the college." The contract with the company assured the college of a constant supply of water for all purposes for the sum of $50 per annum. In January, 1886, J. T. Ward's diary speaks of the introduction of water to the kitchen and laundry and rejoices, in the new range which gave better service with one fire than under the old system was achieved by three. Hot water was available for kitchen, laundry, and ladies' dormitory. There ere some advantages to being female!

The building of Ward Hall and improve ments to the Main Building made possible added facilities for non-academic activities For example, there was a Book Room that could be devoted exlcusively to its proper use as a library: there were two additional music rooms; each of the literary societies was given a room; and the department of natural sciences had a new room large enough to accommodate the entire student body for popular lectures or the showing of slides with the splendid Electro-Radiant Magic Lantern presented to the college by Dr. Ward.

In January, 1882, the formation of the Philomathean Literary Society for women brought the number of societies to four and they came to play an increasing role in the social life of the college. One of their special contributions was the publication of a literary and news magazine. The Irving Literary Society had published its Gazette in the first year of the college, but it had lasted for only three numbers. Then, in February, 1881, a new Irving Literary Gazette was launched. It was numbered Volume 1, Number 1, even though the 1868 publication was properly so designated. The cooperation of all faculty and students was requested, but a growing dissatisfaction in the other societies at having no part in it brought about a change in 1886. when the Portfolio appeared as a rival pub-

There was also a strong spirit of rivalry among the societies in debate and oratorical contests, which with musical programs and evenings of shadow pictures or conundrums provided the students with pleasant recreation. The exhibitions and entertainments mencement week, and these were always very popular. J. T. Ward's diary describes one:

This evening the 1st joint Exhibition of the Browning Literary Society and the Philomathean Society took place in the College Grove under the Pavilion...The number of persons in attendance was, I think not less than one thousand.. After the Literary and Musical exercises six young ladies from each Society went through a series of Calisthenic exercises with such exactness as well illustrated what culture can effect, at the same time that it gave the public to understand the attention the college gives to moral and spiritual improvement of the students.

elapsed since its founding at Western Maryland in 1882.
Several months prior to the September convocation Dr. John Knight, president of Wesley, called to say that his planning committee agreed that, since the seminary was born on the Hill, the first event of the centennial series should be here. We were delighted.
In 1957 Wesley, then and now an autonomous institution with its own board, moved to the campus of The American University in Washington. A personal note: I was Dean of Arts and Sciences at A.U. in 1957, and had the interesting experience of serving on the joint committee that worked on the details of the transfer. Now I am sitting. physically at this moment, on the property that Wesley vacated at WMC.

You might be interested in a little of the history.

Early in the 1880's the Maryland
Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, which is now a part of the United Methodist Church, decided to establish its own theological cided to establish its own theological seminary. This was accomplished as an academic department of the college, which was only 15 years old at the time. At the WMC board meeting, May 4, 1882, four actions were approved: (1) a section of the dormitory was set aside for seminary students, (2) seminary students were admitted free of charge to the classes of the college, (3) the president of the college was directed to furnish "board and washing" to the seminary students for two dollars a week and (4) theological students were to have "free board (sic), washing (sic), heating and lighting." You probably note a contradiction between items (3) and (4) too. Error or not, it is the way the record stands.

Almost immediately support developed for the idea of making the semi-nary a separate institution. The college had assumed a 82,500 mortgage to build the first seminary building. In June, 1884, WMC deeded this building with five acres of land over to the fledgling theological school.

At the recent convocation I could not resist joshing our guests a little by observing that when Wesley went independent in 1884 the college gave them their first building and five acres, but when they left in 1957 they charged us 8174.900 for what we had given them in the first instance. Dr. Doug Chandler, in the first instance. Dr. Doug Chandle, known to many of you, had a ready answer. He reminded me that on what we received back in 1957 there was a newer and larger building (now Elderdice Hall) and four faculty residences, which presently we are using for students. So we are still friends.

The real purpose of this is to con-gratulate Wesley Theological Seminary on the occasion of its centennial and on the occasion of its centennial and for its present distinction as one of the really fine theological institutions in the nation. We are proud to have had a role in its history and wish all there well as they move into their second century of distinguished service.

MYSTERY MAN

By Patricia A. Rouzer

n air of mystery sat over LeRoy Panek's office, like a head sitting over a beer.

One glance said this guy expects visitors to think he's just an ordinary English professor. His office in Western Maryland College's Memorial Hall had all the right stuff—weighty tomes of Renaissance poetry and the complete works of the bard sitting in plain view.

But a detective's nose started to twitch at the sight of a few things that didn't fit the

Like that black-framed commendation on the wall. What's an English professor—a guy who earns his living teaching something called Renaissance literature—doing with an Edgar Allen Poe award hanging over his desk?

And why would an English scholar have stacks of Mystery Writer magazine among the college catalogs and scholarly journals?

All right, Panek, you might as well come clean. We know it ain't "Paradise Lost" you take home at night for light reading.

The man crumpled like a house of cards in a high wind.

Not only is he a mystery buff, he admitted, but—Mickey Spillane forfend—he studies mystery novels and writes criticism on them.

"Actually, I got involved through a January Trm project here at the college, I was looking for something out of the ordinary to teach during the term," he said.

Come on, Panek. You expect us to believe that's all there is to it?

"On the other hand—and I really don't know if this is something I got into after I started looking at detective writing—there is a kind of snobbery [toward detective yarns by the academicians]," he said.

So there it was. This outwardly conventional professor was spitting in the eye of convention.

"Serious novels today—take Thomas Pynchon's 'Gravity's Rainbow.' for example are hard to get through. And those who do get through them all the way often don't understand them. But a well-written mystery is something almost everyone can enjoy." he said. Dr. Panek came late to the addicting qualities of the mystery story. It was not his favorite reading early on. So he had a lot of ground to cover when he began getting into the genre.

"Like anyone starting out at a new thing. I read anything I could get my hands on. It wasn't until I had some background that I began to discriminate." he said.

Now that he has read hundreds of mystery books, he has concluded that the mystery classics—things by Agatha Christie and Dorothy L. Sayers—rank among his favorites

Penning their tales of sleuthery during the 1930's and '40's, these writers honed the mystery to an art.

"There is a kind of elegance and grace about them," he said.

And it is his study of such novels in his book, Watteau's Shepherds: the Detective Novel in Britain 1914 to 1940, which brought him the Mystery Writers Association's Poe award.

But he is not strong on the works of such modern writers—what he calls "blood and guts writers"—as Mickey Spillane.

"They are too graphic and gory. They dwell on the unsavory, rather than how the mystery evolves and how it is solved. The earlier stories by people like Christie and Sayers have their own appeal. They presumed that the reader had some background in things like literature, geography, music. And they take the reader to places they might never go otherwise, such as a university library or an English manor house," he said.

Then there are writers like Georgette Heyer, an author of Gothic mysteries, whose work he finds ponderous, although he does admit she made a contribution to mystery writing as an art.

"Her work is classic, but with all the pages of description and the foreign castles, I find her incredibly dreary," he said.

And what about Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and his all-time super sleuth, Sherlock Holmes?

"There is no doubt the modern detective novel could not exist without Sherlock Holmes. Doyle's stories are important and fascinating, but at the same time they tend to inspire some incredible silliness in people. They are really fun, but some people have developed a serious over-involvement with Sherlock Holmes," Dr. Panek said.

What will Dr. Panek do with the knowledge gleaned from thousands of pages of mysteries —put it all together to pull the perfect caper?

"I have real difficulty in taking seriously people who say the mystery teaches people to go out and be criminals," he said.

"It is ridiculous. A mystery is not like life. By its very existence, a mystery book sets up a certain very limited cast of characters."

Dr. Panek recently has turned to a related genre, the spy novel. His book, The Special Branch: The Spy Novel from 1890 to 1980, is available in local bookstores.

What's next from LeRoy Panek—a mystery, a thriller?

Well, everyone has to draw the line somewhere.

"Occasionally, when we have a $50 plumbing bill. I think about just dashing off one," the professor said. "But I really don't think I could do it."

GPE

By Cindy O'Neal Keefer

ollywood's funnyman Steve Martin, currently appearing in his highly acclaimed film Pennies from Heaven, is going for another box office hit early this summer. And he's going for it with WMC alumnus George Gipe, '55, scriptwriter for Dead Men Don't Wear Platd.

How did George Gipe jump from college grad to successful screenplay writer in the last 27 years? Although George attributes some of his most immediate fame to a fluke (one of his scripts landed in the right hands at the right time) and says, "that is a clear demonstration that luck plays a part," don't let him kid you. His good fortune is backed by a lifetime of diligence to his chosen profes sion, and has been seasoned by his daring willingness to take risks that count. He doesn't take his work lightly and is apt to be brutally frank with an aspiring writer. "If you're in your thirties, you're relatively old to be getting started," he commented. If some one asks him how to get started, he'll counter with the question. "What have you written? He is not particularly encouraging to the aspiring writer who doesn't already "have a pile of stuff" accumulated from sincere dedication to the craft.

"I knew from the day I started at WMC what I wanted to be ... everyone else was searching." mused Gipe. "Some people avoid writing—I love it, it's no chore for me. I see writing as fun." he simplified. Remembering his brief stint as a draftsman after high school, he added. "People would be sitting at their desks and I could envision them sitting there like that decade after decade."

Rejecting that fate. George wrote... and continued to write. "I have 20 plays down-stafrs." he said, gesturing in his rural Upperco home. "They've never been used and never will be." But each piece added invaluable pages to his experience and writing expertise.

"Esther Smith was a big help." he continued. She produced one of his plays as the middle of three one-act Junior Class plays. "I heard the audience really laugh. I love to hear audiences laugh at my stuff." he explained, finishing. "I've been working around the rest of my life to recapture the Esther Smith Experience." Gipe wrote six full-length plays in Scotland in 1957 on a Fulbright scholarship in theatre at the University of Glasgow. He returned to the States to take up reins as a TV station cameraman. Then he moved into the realm of the documentary at WMAR-TV in Baltimore.

"I was a documentary writer for 15 years, although you can't really write a script for a documentary. In a documentary, words are like glue—you can't know what people are going to say until they say it."

During this experience, from 1962 to 1969, Gipe plunged into his least productive personal years. Perhaps that is why, when he was tempted by offers from network chains to do documentaries on a higher level. Gipe made one of his daring decisions to spurn what was conventionally considered an optimum career move. Instead he remained at WMAR and advanced his creative experiences by writing plays for dimer theatres.

One of Gipe's colleagues, Dennis Fawcett, one distinct of the vine an agent; and in 1974 George came in contact with Elaine Markson and made one of his wisest professional moves by contracting her to represent him. In 1975 he wrote the novel Coney Island Quickstep. He also wrote it as a screenplay and Markson secured a screenplay option for it. Although it has not been produced yet, it is still under option and earns option money. Changing public tastes may mean that the option could be picked up at any time.

In 1978, with pressure to make certain career moves at the TV station. Gipe consulted with his agent again and left TV for full-time freelancing. With Coney Istand Quickstep, and an exhaustive volume on sports history among other things already behind him he continued to write, concentrating on screen-plays. He also got contracts to write novels around screenplays.

By the late 1970's, George Gipe was gung-ho on movies. "Movies are my thing—they're not as difficult as plays, not to mention that they make more movies than they produce new plays," he laughed.

So what happened next? The fluke occurrence. Through chance channels, Gipe's screenplay "Opus I" fell into the hands of actor James MacArthur. Interested in produc ing it, MacArthur had his agent forward it to several directors, among them, Carl Reiner.

Reiner, more immediately interested in Gipe's style than in Opus I invited him to Hollywood to assist in the writing and production of Martin's film "Depression."

"Depression" as it turned out was depressed as a potential film. After only two weeks of work in conjunction with Gipe. Reiner determined that the film as it was developing had no future; Gipe's future hung in the balance.

But balance tilted in his favor. While Martin left for a nightclub stint, Gipe and Reiner began viewing film classics; they took off then on the creation of a totally new detective story borne of old movies, old stars and old lines. During Carl's vacation, Gipe wrote the first 150-page draft. With a period of shortening, reworking and polishing, a 110-page script became the movie Dead Men Don't Wear Platid.

After years of build-up to his present status. Gipe is still adjusting to the reality and enormity of his accomplishments. "Thrill is not predictable." he said. "It's a thrill to have the guard at the studio gate recognize me—then all of a sudden it will strike me. One of my biggest thrills was in August when I got a look at some of the actual film with integrations."

"For the first time in my life," he continued,
"Yee really been the center of attention."
Now Gipe has several screenplays floating around in the high places of Hollywood. He has been working on a scrib most recently with Marty Feldman. Through a combination of me determination and luck, it seems his efforts, unlike those of so many potentially good, fulltime Hollywood writers, are really destined to make it to your neighborhood theatre.

The movie man still writes books. Between knee surgery and the recent Writer's Guild strike, he completed Last Things First which will be published within the next year. Most important, though his work now takes him from East Coast to West Coast, he's still a family man with his wife. Nancy, two sons, Larry and Geordie, a cat or two and a home in Baltimore County.

In a way, through George Gipe, a little bit of Western Maryland College has made it to the Silver Screen.

Reunion Gifts

This will be the fifth year since the college began to recognize in a special way re-union gifts from the 25th, 40th, and 50th reunion disses. This year, those dissess will be the classes of 1957, 1942, and 1932.

The Fund Chairman in each of the classes will be making an effort to make their Alumni Fund gift to the college as significant as possible, for announcement at the Alumni Day May 100. The chickens are 1957. Banquet on May 29. The chairmen are: 1957— Anne G. DeCourcey; 1942—Zachariah Ebaugh and Margaret Adolph; 1932—Charles W. Forlines.

Over the five-year period, reunion gifts from these special reunion classes have doubled their previous Alumni Fund support. To date, the record holders on gift dollars and donors are:

Philip Myers, '16, sent in the following essay, written Dec. 16, 1981:

A windless night of snow—about four inches, I am told, made a fairyland of the grove of trees and the brook to the rear of my home. Each branch, even the tiniest twig, was laden down with the immaculate crystals. In the early light of dawn (there was no sun-rise) the waters of the rill bown of the rill bown of the rill bown of the rill bown with the waters of the rill bown Never has Nature awed me to such a degree. Could I but have painted the scene before me as my inner eyes saw it, it would, in truth, have been a masterpiece of which even Constable would have been proud.

My emotions rose to the heights.

Oct. 18, 1981

Dear Jane,
This is the morning after, and I will try to relate a few of my immediate recollections from a day that just did not last long enough. After 20 years we obviously need at least a two--and I would certainly vote for BRENDA MAYER to make the arrangements—

she did a super job! the aura of Homecoming remains the same for a Saturday afternoon football game. You can envision the scene much as it was from 1957 to 1961; only now the kegs are in view and beer is dispensed freely to returning sorority and fraternity members, etc. One van top was complete with matched candelabra and a bowl of flowers. I overheard a sophomore gal remark to our JULIE, "Can you be lieve this scene!?" My only reaction was "wai

dear until you return." She'll probably do us one better.

I know that the game and traditional half-time ceremonies went on, but I missed much of that. My afternoon was the same as many others from the class of '61—handmany others from the class of '61—hand-shakes, hugs, exchanged embraces, notes compared on children in college, comments in-clicating recognition, comments in-clicating recognition, comments inclicating total amazement, "...you're who?" Summanily, we are a recognizable, intact, alumni group. DON and JUDY REMBERT have a daughter HEATHER in the freshman class, ai-ready on the cheerleading squad. Others men-tioned youngsters in various stages of educationed youngsters in various stages of educa-tion from elementary to college graduate. DAVE and JOYCE EDINGTON have a son who has completed his four years. By unani-mous opinion, it was agreed that those who had changed the least included NANCY STE-WART, JEAN CARTER, JERRY DOFLORA, JIM BROWN and C. T. GISSE (give or take a few pounds).

Most of the classmates on the Hill in the afternoon turned up for dinner at the Branding fron Restaurant later that evening, and an ai-most complete contingent of the "House" group appeared just for the evening's festivities. The evening commenced with ample time for a cash bar. CHARLIE MITCHELL welcomed everyone as we were seated about 7 p.m. for dinner. WAYNE CONRAD, in full beard, blessed our undertakings and the food before us in a most suitable fashion. Seven round ta-bles of 10 each filled the room with a "roll call" list tied and provided at every other place setting.

I don't believe there was an appreciable change in the noise level until all dinners were served and simultaneously everyone tasted crab imperial or delmonico steak. As dinner ended, Brenda put her party plan into action— a wonderful game based on class of '61 mem-bers then and now, which kept spirits high all evening.

must note the absence of a musica group to round out the evening. Without the pre-arranged arrival of a three-, five-, or sixpiece whatever, our conversations and recollections were able to continue uninterrupted well into the wee hours of Sunday morning.

The hours passed all too quickly. I remember BONNIE and Charlie having to depart to drive back to New Jersey. "Punch" and his daughter, too, made a reasonably early depar-ture. But others stayed and stayed. At 11:45 Don Rembert settled down with his guitar and led the tattered remnants in some picking and singing. BILL MOORE's wife captured all of this on film and promised to blow the snapshots into poster-size for our next occasion.

Somehow as the evening (morning re ally) came to an end, the atmosphere was very warm. How wonderful it will be to do this very soon again. As always, Barbara.

WORSHIPING IN WHEELCHAIRS 4444444

By William R. Chesley

n June, an extraordinary congregation in Florida celebrated eight years of wor ship and fellowship, as the Church of the Handicapped

When the congregation celebrated its seventh anniversary, they turned out 135strong-in wheelchairs and on walkers and canes, some with cerebral palsy, others who were blind or deaf, some who were retardeda congregation that couldn't get to church without the loving help offered through the Church of the Handicapped.

The congregation got its start in 1973 through the leadership of two officers of the Miami Shores Presbyterian Church, John J. Reinecke, WMC class of '28, and Paul Date. Since then, the Church of the Handicapped has grown, been incorporated and now is supported by some 30 churches of all denominations in the Miami area.

Usually the congregation meets on the first Saturday of each month at one of the sponsoring churches. There are lessons from Scripture, a luncheon and fellowship hour, and an hour of worship, with music, prayer, sermon and the sacrament of Communion. Each meeting depends on "a small army of volunteers" from the host church, to drive, to attend the worshipers, to cook and serve the luncheon and to assist wherever they are needed

The worshipers get involved too, helping each other, and the result is a demonstration of the power of the Holy Spirit. Worshipers and helpers alike forget themselves and their troubles in the absorption of worship, fellow ship and the sharing of the knowledge that God loves them just as He loves each of His

For many of the worshipers, attending the service is the only chance they have to break out of a shut-in existence. Those coming for the first time often remark that it is their first opportunity in many years to share in corporate worship. New friendships often are made and nurtured through the monthly gatherings.

While the purpose of the Church of the Handicapped is to provide an opportunity for worship and fellowship for persons who are handicapped, its benefits reach beyond that purpose. Those who help provide the facilities and personal services needed for the monthly meetings often find their lives changed by their involvement.

"This was like a second conversion for many of our members," said one minister. "Our people gave of themselves, sacrificed time and effort, and the day provided a renewal of our congregational life.

Another pastor offered thanks for the program, saying, "Many of our members ex pressed such a deep concern for those they helped that they have established on-going friendships with them. Our thanks for enabling our church to share in this ministry. Although the Church of the Handicapped began through one congregation, responsibility for its functioning and effectiveness nov is shared by all the churches participating. The program is incorporated, and each church is expected to provide one "corpora tion director." Each congregation also appoints two persons who are handicapped to serve at large as board members and advisers to the organization.

The area-wide activity, led by a steering committee chaired by founder John Reinecke, has become so popular that churches involved often reserve host-dates a year in advance Enthusiasm for the project is so strong that the participating churches have prepared a Procedures Manual, to encourage churches in other areas to set up a similar activity. The guide and other material for such a project can be obtained from Reinecke through Miami Shores Presbyterian Church, 602 N.E. 96th Street, Miami Shores, Fla. 33138

Started by the college as a January Term class project, the races are among the most popular in the Baltimore area, according to Phil Jackman of the Baltimore Evening Sun. Now the races are co-sponsored by the college and the Westminster Road Runners, a local running club. Dr. H. Samuel Case, professor of physical education, and Dr. David Herlocker, professor of chemistry, were two of the many race organizers

'I can tell you exactly how cold it was," said Case, who didn't run but worked at the finish line. "It was three degrees below zero, with 35 mile-per-hour winds." Herlocker ran in the 15-kilometer race (the other race is five kilometers) and finished 60th of 238 who started the 15-kilometer. Altogether, approximately 550 runners participated in the two races.

Research and Creativity

The Faculty Research and Creativity Committee at WMC awarded grants to six faculty members last semester. Each grant, which must be used before next grant, which must be used before next year, will allow recipient faculty members an opportunity to research and write on topics of interest. The grants, awarded at the end of the fall semester, totaled $5,180 and were financed by college funds and by an $8,000 grant from IBM. The following professors were recent recipients of funding from the committee. committee t's time to give credit where it's due. Sending it's volleyball team to LaVerne, Calif., to the Division III national tourna ment in December was a nice gesture by the Western Maryland College administration.

At Division III colleges athletics generally take a backseat to academics. Athletic scholarships are not awarded at the Division III level, and at most small schools, student athletes are expected to cut the mustard academically as well.

Western Maryland had been no exception to what might be called the Division III philosophy of placing the classroom above the playing field.

But it is evident that intercollegiate sports do play a part in everyday life at Western Maryland. Why would the administration at WMC decide to spend between $6,000 and $7,000 to send its women's team to California if sports were not something of a priority?

"I think we're very supportive of our athletic programs," vice-president for student affairs Wray Mowbray said Wednesday. "We treat athletics as part of the total education.

Obviously, the volleyball team wanted to win the national championship, but Mowbray said he felt the experience of the trip was just as important to those involved.

There are different kinds of academic experiences. The classroom is not the only place you get an education," Mowbray said.

In addition to playing in a prestigious national tournament, the Lady Terrors had a chance to share experiences with women from all over the country. They also saw firsthand how their brand of volleyball compares with the best in the United States

California has the reputation of being a volleyball hotbed. Host LaVerne swept through the tournament to win the national title.

But the WMC women weren't awed by the competition. They were disappointed they didn't do better in the tournament.

"I expected better teams there. We never got the rhythm of our offense going," said Lydia Cox, a member of the WMC team

"I was glad to see we could play with any body in the country. With a little more preparation and rest, it could have gone the other way," said hitter Becky Bankert.

The cross-country trip had some effect on the Terror women. After a 71/2-hour flight, a van trip to LaVerne College and a banquet honoring the teams involved, WMC showed signs of jet lag when it took the court at 9 a.m. the next morning.

'We didn't have time to get acclimated to being there. We didn't get much rest," said Terror coach Carol Fritz.

WMC was competitive in all its matches, but when the team needed to call on extra effort, it just wasn't there, Fritz said.

"We're not making excuses, but I saw them play better during the year," Fritz said.

The Terrors lost to Biola (Calif.) College in their first match, a team that Fritz thought they could beat.

"After we played our first match, I thought we could win there," Fritz said.

Still, the WMC women had the experience of being the first team from the college to compete for a national title. Team member Patsy Moyles said the Terrors will be back.

"Now we know we can do it. We expect to go back next year," Moyles said.

The only team from the East to make it into the quarterfinals was East Stroudsburg (Pa.)

State, which has offered to host the nationals in the future, Fritz said.

It might be interesting to see how the California teams fared if they had to make a flight to Pennsylvania and then compete the next day.

Even third-seeded Georgia Tech had difficulty adjusting, not making it through pool

Fritz said the teams play with different styles, with the Midwest relying on defense, the western teams on offense and the East playing a combination of both. For years, the California teams have dominated Division III volleyball, Fritz said.

"The gap is closing between the East and West," said the coach.

The Terrors found time on their trip to visit Hollywood, Beverly Hills, Sunset Boulevard and Disneyland. It was part of what the college considers a learning experience, with the complete support from the WMC administrators.

"I've heard no negative comment about the trip to California," Mowbray said.

May Day's C

By Toni Epstein, '83

hen it's springtime on the Hill, the signs are everywhere. Robinson Garden blooms. Whiteford beach opens. se balls sail across the quad and there is the distant crack of baseballs against bats. But one event that says it's really spring at WMC is the annual May Day celebration.

May Day, a holiday that dates back to ancient Celtic mythology, celebrates the coming of spring and has been a part of spring at WMC since very early in its own history. Those early celebrations included a May Queen and court (complete with pages), plays in the now overgrown back campus amphitheatre, parades and most important, a Maypole. A 1933 issue of the Gold Bug de scribes that year's planned festivities.

Winter, represented by Louise Needy, enters with the winter winds. They dance around the flower beds in front of the May Queen's court then disappear as spring enters with her warm rains and sunbeams. enters total ther warm rains and sunbeams.
The flowers from each bed go to two Maypole which are to be on either side of the ourt. They dance around the Maypole while the rest of the flowers and elements form a background.
That traditional approach to May Day lasted through many decades at WMC. After that article was written, the campus saw three and a half more decades of May Queens crowned, and used hundreds of yards of Maypole ribbon. In 1964, May Day was a weekend cele-bration, and not only included traditional trappings, but added the Junior Follies to its program.

Then came the '70's; times were changing, and WMC May Day was too. The traditions of decades before disappeared, and in their place were the new traditions that we follow today.
May Day was now a May Carnival, and its name matched the atmosphere. Carnival booths, balloons and outdoor art shows replaced parades and court pages. Campus queens were saved for Homecoming, and the amphitheatre was forgotten.

May Day 1982 was a blend of its 1970's counterpart, plus a few new traditions. "The Sounds of Silence," a show of music, sign language and mime made its third May Day appearance. After seeing the show, a May Day celebrant could stroll through the outdoor art show, drop in on the Hoover Library book sale, or congratulate the winner of the May Day 10K run. After stopping off to buy a sub or taco, he or she probably picked a good spot to watch the May Day Almost Anything Goes competition, hopefully out of the way of the tobacco spitting contest, as a balloon ascension carried the colors of Maypole past. The

New Early Sunrise Band and Off the Wall provided music all day, as well as during the Bull Roast at the end of the day. The annual spring dance brought May Day to a festive close

May Day on the Hill has gone through a lot of changes, but one thing hasn't changed. Spring is still something to celebrate, and any May Queen or tobacco spitter will tell you so estern Maryland College, in conjunction with the Helen Keller National Center for Deaf-Blind Youths and Adults, is offering the first professional program ever to prepare qualified applicants for a career to work with deaf-blind adults.

Deaf-blindness is the most debilitating double handleap known to man. An estimated 30,000 to 60,000 men, women and children currently suffer its overwhelming implications. The majority of cases of deaf-blindness are caused by a genetic condition known as Usher's Syndrome. Victims of Usher's are born deaf and suffer from progressive blindness due to retinitis pigmentosa. Other cases of deaf-blindness are attributable to the loss of sight hearing due to accidents, diseases or as part of the natural aging process of persons afflicted with only one of the disabilities through most of life. For example, a person born blind may gradually lose hearing as he or she gets older.

Western Maryland's pioneering 33 credit master of science program is designed to train professionals to meet the comprehen sive needs, i.e. educational, training, mobility and counseling of the deaf-blind population. The program began this June at Western Maryland College. The curriculum includes 18 graduate hours in the fields of deafne blindness and deaf-blindness. Nine additional hours are taken in a field of emphasis selected by the student from areas including mobility training, administration, reading, physical education, counseling, secondary education or special education. Three hours of research and the three-credit course, "Trends in American Thought" complete the on campus curriculum. Academic work is followed by a onesemester individually designed internship at the Helen Keller National Center for Deaf-Blind Youths and Adults.

The Helen Keller Center is the preeminent rehabilitation facility for deaf-blind persons in the world. Located in Sands Point, Long Island, New York, its staff of highly trained professionals offers a comprehensive program of services to the Center's approximately 50 residents.

Julia van den Bovenkamp, a 1982 graduate of Western Maryland College, worked this spring as an assistant at the Helen Keller Center. She and another Western Maryland College student, Diana Vebares, 82, participated in a January Term internship at the Center, At the conclusion of her internship.

van den Bovenkamp applied for and was hired to fill a part-time position working with the deaf-blind.

The program will take full advantage of the facilities and expertise of both Western Maryland College and the Helen Keller Center. Several of the courses are regular offerings at Western Maryland as part of its education of the deaf, psychology and education graduate programs. The assistance of faculty from the Helen Keller Center for nine hours of new courses at Western Maryland and the international programs. The second of the course at Western Maryland and the international programs of the second o added to complete the curriculum. Designed for students with backgrounds in deafness, blindness or an interest in human service, the program will enhance the attractiveness of its graduates in the counseling and rehabilitation job market by broadening the range of clients with whom they will be qualified to work. The Helen Keller Center works closely with 17 affiliated programs throughout the nation, all of which need qualified professionals to work in their facilities.

Dr. McCay Vernon, WMC professor of psychology, has been the driving force behind this new program. A respected expert in his field, he has published numerous articles related to the causes, diagnoses and rehabilitation of deaf-blind individuals. Vernon attributes the inspiration for this program to a conversation he had with Martin Adler, director of the Helen Keller Center, in the fall of 1981. According to Adler, no university or college was preparing professionals specifically prepared to meet the uniquely challenging needs of their program. "They (Helen Keller Center) had to train people on the job for this, the most demanding of all forms of rehabilitation, deaf-blind people had to be the guinea pigs." Dr. Vernon related.

With the assistance of Dr. Stan Bowlsbey, associate dean for graduate studies at WMC, and Dr. Hugh Prickett, associate professor of education, most of the administrative and organizational headaches have been overcome. Financial burdens, on the other hand, still represent imposing hurdles. Vernon is experiencing difficulty raising money to finance a program that was conceived too late to be included in the College's current budget.

One of the most expensive aspects of the program may also turn out to be one of the most crucial determinants of its long-term success. "We have a strong conviction in keeping this open to qualified students who themselves are deaf-blind," Dr. Vernon explained. "for these are the people who usually have a deep commitment, a personal stake, in staying in the field." The costs of individual interpreters and special equipment to make this a feasible program for handicapped as well as non-handicapped students represent a major financial burden for the program.

Despite uncertainty concerning the issue of finances, by all indications, the program is off to a strong start. Citing "very strong interest in the program from all over the country," Dr. Vernon described the positive string of events over the past few months leading to rapid initiation of the program as nothing short of "miraculous."

Deaf, Blind, and Still Living

To deaf persons, blindness is by far the most frightening of all handicaps. For an unfortunate few, it is an awesome reality.

For an unfortunate few, it is an awesome reality.

"What happens to most of these people," according to WMC professor of psychology Dr. McCay Vernon. "is that they sit in a rocking chair 18 hours a day, only to be poked every now and them when it is time to eat. They face the most total isolation known to mankind." Dr. Vernon estimates that only 2,000 to 3,000 of the estimated 30,000 to 66,000 deaf-blind persons in the United States are known to the agencies which should serve them. Rod MacDonald has been blind since which should serve them.

Rod MacDonald has been blind since the age of 3 and deaf since age 10. A computer specialist for the U.S. Department of Labor, he is a unique example of how much can be achieved in the face of such overwhelming handicaps.

MacDonald has worked with the Department of Labor since 1970. In 1976

he took a leave of absence to return to school and earn his master's degree in educational administration from the California State University at Northeridge. After working with the California Department of Rehabilitation as the director of a program to train deaf-bilind persons for jobs in the computer field. MacDonald returned to his position with the Department of Labor this past December. Currently pursuing his doctoral degree through the University of Southern California. MacDonald is President of the American Association of the Deaf-Billind.

Readjusting to his job with the Department of Labor has been difficult for MacDonald. "My work is very frustrating because I cannot communicate with fellow workers. Sometimes I go several days without communicating with anyone at work." While studying and working in California, MacDonald had constant access to interpreters, assistants and other persons trained in manual communication and fingerspelling. Living in that environment made communication much easier than ever before. "It was almost as if I could hear." he recalled.

His experience in California underscored a key problem faced by all deafblind students A "C+" student in high school and college. MacDonald earned straight "As" throughout his graduate career. "It is not that I became brilliant overnight." he explained, "but with the help of interpreters and other assistance I could compete effectively. Without that help it was difficult just to

MacDonald stated that one of the biggest problems in helping the deaf-billind is that most professionals are trained to help either deaf people or bilind people, but not people suffering from both handicaps. According to MacDonald. That combination is the most important thing." Western Maryland College's program to train professionals to work with the deaf-bilind will adopt just this approach. It is geared toward teaching professionals how to deal with the special challenges deaf deal with the special challenges deaf blindness portends. MacDonald can recall several events (both past and present) which emphasize the frustrations he has faced. He had to change his undergraduate major several times because of the limited availability of braille textbooks. His first job as a college graduate was in a sheltered workshop sorting nails. Yet, he tries to keep these sebtacks in perspective. "To me being deaf-blind is a nuisance, it makes things difficult at times. Whatever it is that makes me a person is not at all affected by my being handicapped. Losing these senses doesn't bother me because it doesn't touch me as a person. I'm still every bit as much a human being now as it would be fit regalined my sight and hearing tomorrow."—B.B.

"I lost

hat would you do if after 19 years of perfectly normal vision, you suddenly went blind? For Marshall Weimann, a senior at Western Maryland College, this nightmare became a reality

He began his freshman vear at Western Maryland in 1977, and although he suffered from diabetes, enjoyed a fine year academically as well as socially. Up until this time he had perfect vision. Then in the fall of his sophomore year, according to Marshall, "I started having trouble with my eyes, my left one mostly. Things would go in and out of focus, and I was becoming more night-blind."

Over Thanksgiving break doctors diagnosed his problem as a disease, common to diabetics, called proliferative retinopathy. Caused by improper diet, proliferative retinopathy is an abnormal growth of blood vessels in the retina, which in turn clouds vision. Despite this inconvenience, Marshall finished out the semester.

After Christmas, he went to the Joslyn Diabetic Clinic in Boston to be treated for his retinopathy. There, Marshall underwent a series of laser treatments to destroy excess blood vessels in the retina, and to retard any further growth. Although these treatments in the long run are supposed to be beneficial to the patient, the initial shock of the laser renders him or her blind for up to two weeks after the session. Consequently, Marshall was forced to withdraw from Western Maryland for the spring semester.

Despite the painful treatments, his condition continued to deteriorate. Then one morning disaster struck, "I woke up and I couldn't see anything at all. The doctors discovered that overnight I had had a massive hemorrhage in my right eye, which up to then could have been saved." In April, six months after being diagnosed, Marshall was totally blind.

In May, Marshall enrolled in a rehabilitation clinic in Newark, N. J., where they taught him the basic skills needed to survive on the outside. "The hardest thing for a blind person to learn," says Marshall, is to be independently mobile. While at the clinic, I was living alone in an apartment in downtown Newark several miles away. Every morning I had to take the bus, then walk a good distance to the clinic Often I found myself lost or disoriented. That scares the hell out of you."

The people at the clinic were well meaning, but according to Marshall, were somewhat insensitive to the needs of blind people. "They were intent on teaching me a skill. So among other basic living skills like cooking, cleaning, and personal hygiene, they taught me how to thread pipes. Since then, I haven't come within 100 yards of a pipe threader." Marshall was discharged from the clinic in Marshai was uschaiged northe chair in January of 1979 and enrolled in Western Maryland for the spring semester. "When I got back to school the only problems I encoun-tered were social. Many of his freshman friends had ei

"Many people were either very uncomfortable around me or they treated me like a child. Sometimes I felt like screaming 'I lost my eyes not my brain.' Dating for me now isn't much of a problem; I can get a date, but starting a serious relationship has been difficult." As people got to know Marshall better, they could see beyond his handicap and accepted him for himself. Says a close friend, Lauri Hill, "His blindness doesn't even enter into our rela tionship. I've become less and less aware of it."

By Chris

Because of his handicap, Marshall's methods of class preparation and participation differ from most students. "I usually go to class with a tape recorder and record the lecture. Then I condense the tape onto another and edit out all the unimportant data." For written material he must hire a reader. Tests are more difficult for him than the average student because he must answer the questions orally. When taking an essay test, he must recite the answer on tape then turn it in to the teacher. Nonetheless, this inconvenient and difficult method of testing hasn't hindered his grade point average which is a solid B.

In addition Marshall, a member of Psi Chi, the national psychology honor society, was recently selected to Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges.

After graduating this spring, he plans to enroll in the University of Connecticut master's program in applied psychology Originally he had planned to study clinical psychology but his handicap prevented this. "I wouldn't be able to administer an IQ test properly, for one thing," says Marshall.
"Instead I hope to work in a mental health clinic, or work with drug addicts on a one-toone basis.

This pragmatic, "hands on" approach is evident in every facet of Marshall's life. Last summer he journeyed out to California, by himself to visit some friends. The trip included bus rides, plane transfers, and nego tiating John F. Kennedy Airport in New York City, a tough job even for a sighted person.

Through his independence, Marshall has overcome most of the restrictions and limitations imposed on the blind because of their handicap. But some prejudices still remain. Marshall sums it up, "Many people who claim to be liberal really are not. They say 'I don't mind Blacks, or Puerto Ricans or handicaps, just as long as my son or daughter doesn'

"Blind people are just that—people. We've lost our sight, but the person is still there.'

Terry Rippin has come to WMC as director of College Activities. Previously director of Student Life at Howard County Community College, he received his B.A. and M.A. from Bowling Green State University. Fred Smyth, '80, has returned to campus as assistant regis-trar. Previously an admissions counselor at WMC. Smyth worked most recently as a substitute teacher in the Baltimore County school system.

Dr. Jeanne Higbee has been promoted to associate dean of students from her previous position as director of coun-seling and career services. Formerly assistant registrar, Pam Roland has been promoted to associate registrar and Bonnie Watts has been promoted from assistant director of financial aid to associate director.

SOUND & FURY IN ANNAPOLIS

By Herbert C. Smith

lection year legislatures are notorlous for grandstanding and parliamentary wheelspinning, but the 1982 Maryland General Assembly defied the odds. During the ninety-day session the legislature compiled a productive record over a broad spectrum of issues, considering over 12,000 bills and approving 3,810.

Although the great majority of legislation enacted represented only technical adjustments to the existing code, the session did not lack controversy. Raising the drinking age for the consumption of beer and wine, increasing the interest rate celling, hiking the state gasoline tax, delaying the impending vehicle emissions inspection program six months, all generated considerable sound and fury among the salons of Annapolis.

In short, the legislature acted responsibly, surprising many reporters and probably the legislators themselves. The reasons for the somewhat unexpected maturation of the Maryland General Assembly are as interesting as what the legislature did and falled to do.

To understand the actions of any legislative assembly, the first order of business is to comprehend its institutional and political context. Over the past decade, the Maryland legislature has undergone massive professionalization of both membership and institutional resources. In the late 1960's the Maryland legislator served only 60 days a year and received $2,400 for his or her labors. Today the 90 day se is just part of the workload. Senators and Delegates alike are expected to attend the weekly interim meetings of their respective committees, many have established regular hours at their district offices for constituent services, and close to 70 percent of the legislators consider their role a full-time job.

The legislative salary schedule has escalated accordingly with the present $18,500 compensation due for a hike to $21,000 next year. In addition, legislators enjoy modern offices and the technical assistance of fiscal analysis and bill drafting. Finally the leadership of the Senate and House, first elected in 1979, has attained sufficient seasoning. Both House Speaker Benjamin Cardin (D-Baltimore City) and Senate President James Clark (D-Howard County) command wide respect.

The long-term institutional forces that increased the overall professional competence of the General Assembly dovetailed in 1982 with several short-term political pressures. First, 1982 is an election year; but more important, it is the first time since the Supreme Court "one-person, one vote" decisions that an election year and statewide reapportionment have coincided. For many legislators that means campaigning in new communities; and for some unlucky legisla tors it means campaigning against each other because of redistricting. To paraphrase Samuel Johnson, such prospects concentrate political minds wonderfully. Thus, a productive session in this particular election year made eminent political sense

It's an election year for the Governor as well. This year. Governor Harry Hughes filled the strong-governor role. With the aid of a revamped staff, a wide-ranging and ambitious legislative agenda was established and publicized early in the session. The Governor then lobbted extensively for his program and the focused attention paid off. The 86.2 billion Executive Budget encountered little difficulty in either chamber of the legislature. A decidedly election-year budget, it represents a 6.9 percent increase over 1982 expenditures and gives state employees a 9 percent raise, allows a 9 percent increase in welfare grants, adds 153 new positions to the Department of Public Safety and Corrections, and provides for the construction of new prison facilities. On other issues, Governor Hughes won some (gas tax), lost some (handgun control), compromised some (vehicle emissions delay), and ignored some (higher education reorganization). But the emergence of an activist governor definitely provided the General Assembly with a substantial sense of direction.

Finally, the impact of President's Reagan's budget cuts pressured the legislature into widespread acceptance of the idea that Mary land will have to do more with less. The Federal Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 consolidated 57 categorical grants in-aid programs into nine modified bloc grants. These give the states more discre-tionary power in spending less money. This year Maryland lost $50 million in direct and about $250 million in indirect aid. In the overwhelmingly Democratic legislature (there are only 23 Republicans out of 188 members) fears that the Reagan Administration will pit the interests of disadvantaged groups against each other were evident. These anxieties worked to increase party cohesion in what some perceived as a Democratic bastion in a Republican sea.

So the General Assembly worked for a variety of reasons; for in politics, there are few singular motivations. Great innovations and sweeping changes were almost entirely absent. Most of the issues resolved had been debated before, but a limited agenda is probably the one to get used to for the 1980's.

It Just Occurs By Ralph C. John

Western Maryland College is located on Parr's Ridge. On first blush this might seem an insignificant piece of trivia. A closer look, however, reveals the contrary.

This geological formation, which extends roughly between Manchester and Mount Airy (if you include Dug Hill), has identifiable regional importance. For one thing, it is a political boundary that candidates for public office must take seriously.

The eastern side orients to Baltimore County and, beyond that, to Charm City itself, it is more densely populated, more Democratic in party affiliation and, withal, more urban/suburban in orientation. The western slope is the opposite. It is basically rural, more Republican and conservative.

There is new educational significance to the location of the college on Parr's Ridge. Some months ago Senator Charles McC. Mathias appointed a Commission on the Potomac River Basin to study and make recommendations on this region. It was my privilege to serve on that commission, one of the proposals of which was the organization of an academic Consortium on the Potomac River Basin. The purpose of this affiliation of colleges and universities is to sponsor symposia, lectures, studies and research on the area of this historic watershed.

Frostburg State College and approximately 20 other institutions, WMC's Street, Westminster, drains to the Patapsco River and, through it, into the Baltimore Harbor. Our side of town, however, sends its runoff into the Potomac through Pipe Creek and the Monocare.

Monocacy.

The Potomac River provides the geographic axis for a very interesting and diverse, section of the United States. It runs from Point Lookout in St. Mary's County, up past Westmoreland and Mt. Vernon through the Nation's Capital, vernon through the Nation's Capital, across the piedmont, and into the wountains of Maryland and West Virginia.

Parts of this region, of course, have been included in studies with primary focus on other subjects. Civil War studies, or the history of railroads, for example, could not be done without taking the Potomac basin into account. It is incredible, though, that very little has been done on the region itself, as a definable object of scholarship in its own right.

Now we shall make a systematic effort to learn more about the archaeology.

the Fotomac.

Perhaps I am a little overly excited about this. But I know this river from places where you can jump across it. On the South Branch, down to where you cannot see across it. I have spent a good many years of my life living in this region, including the last ten years at Western Maryland on the western side of Parr's Ridge.

In my judgment, we are into a good thing through this new relationship.

Wearing the Badge of Concern

By Jennifer Gill, '83

t is 6:00 p.m. A brutal murder has taken place. A woman is crying bitterly over her child's body. A quarrel? A mere mis understanding? Perhaps. But Montgomery County Detective Cathy Stavely, '71, must not allow herself to become emotionally involved. She tells herself, "Keep your common sense, realize that witnesses may be tired and high strung and upset from the incident at hand. Calm the person down. Try to get as much correct information as possible. Keep your emotions at a distance." The story is out, the woman is sobbing. Det. Stavely reminds herself, "There's a limit to what I can do for this person. I can't do everything myself." Cathy Stavely must always keep herself on guard while investigating. She's been trained to expect the unexpected

There is one school of thought that views police officers as social workers with badges." Stavely says, acknowledging that her training for police work did include crisis training courses to help her handle the difficult personal problems of crime victims. With a bachelor's degree in biology from Western Maryland College and a master's degree in forensic science from George Washington University, Stavely worked with the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the serology unit for two years

While working for the FBI Stavely attended night classes at George Washington for her master's in forensics. Forensic science deals with gathering all of the evidence in a crime and putting it in a legal form so that it may be presented in a court of law. At the FBI, Stavely tested blood, semen, sweat and saliva sera in order to help narrow down suspects by process of elimination. She says that unusual cases occasionally came up. For example, game wardens would sometimes ask the FBI to test for deer blood found on a hunter clothes who may have killed deer out of the normal hunting season. Besides sera, Stavely studied the use of physical sciences in determining a suspect and the tools used in a crime, including ballistics, handwriting, and the soil analysis. For example, if there were indentations left in a door from a crowbar, detectives attempt to find such a tool, compare it to the marks left in the door, and conclude whether or not that article pertained to the crime. After her two years with the FBI, Stavely went on to train at the police academy. This not only included basic law enforcement classes, but two weeks of shooting practice with rifles and handguns, and one hour of hard physical training at the end of each day. Five mile runs, at least 50 situps, and vigorous calisthenics were what she had to look forward to daily. After her academy training. Stavely worked on a "beat" for four years, patrolling in a police car, ticketing, and answering miscellaneous calls. Then in 1978, Stavely chose to become involved with the investigative aspect of police work, which she has found to be challenging and exciting. She spent three years in a central investigative unit which covered all of Montgomery County. Since the department was so large, the detec tives were subdivided into different crime categories, and each group specializes in specific crimes, Detective Stavely's being persons cases: death investigations, sex offenses and robberies. In the past year, Stavely transferred to the Germantown District Station (Mont. Co.), which is a smaller unit and allows for more variety of crimes for each detective to cover.

Currently, Detective Stavely handles follow-up investigations, making phone calls, interviewing witnesses, pursuing leads, investigating crime locations, coordinating with other law enforcement agencies for ties and ideas about the crimes, and ultimately, making arrests

She is the only woman in criminal investigation at the Germantown station and is routinely assigned about 15 to 20 cases a month. Working as a female with male officers has not hindered her career at all. In fact, she admits that women and men work well together, although she feels the men can be "a little over protective." Overall, she is glad to know that someone is concerned for her wellbeing. Being female has helped her in handling sexual abuse cases. "I find it helps emotionally for a woman to deal with another woman." Stavely does think that sometimes being a woman cop can be awkward. "Some traffic offenders would look amazed when they spotted me walking toward their car.'

After she gathers all evidence in a case, Stavely is responsible for putting together facts that lead the court to believe that the person on trial is or is not the actual criminal.

For sure, there are many weird and baffling cases to cover in the life of a detective. Stavely recalls a case where an old woman died and her team of detectives was called to investigate the woman's house. The old woman had been very fond of cats and had many of them, but they were not the normal housecat varie ties. The cats were a unique South American breed that appeared more like tiny tigers rather than typical housecats. When the detectives spotted the animals they became a bit unnerved. "One was staring down at us from on top of the refrigerator," recalls Stavely. "We got out of there as quickly as possible, and called in the humane society to handle the

Although a career as a detective limits her social life, Stavely enjoys the hard work. She stresses that what the job takes is a person "interested in other people and in serving the community. We're getting more sophisticated, highly trained applicants," she adds. "It enables us to do a more professional job." I find my work is fulfilling and rewarding be cause it allows me to show my concern for my fellow citizens."

he tennis game of Ken Volk, '47, is like a fine wine-it improves with age. A dentist by trade, Volk is one of the top amateur tennis players nationally in his age group.

He teamed with retired Air Force pilot Hal DeMoody last year to finish second in the 55and-over age bracket to the National Amateur Clay Court Championships in Knoxville, Tensee. "We came within one set of being number one," Volk said.

Volk is the top-ranked player in the Middle Atlantic region in both the 45-, and 55-andover age groups. While DeMoody is his part ner at 55, Baltimorean Jim Cummings is his partner in the 45 bracket.

Besides the clay court tourney in Tennes see, Volk competes in the annual grass court championships in Germantown, Pennsylvania, occasionally in both age brackets "Sometimes I play both of them just for the heck of it," he said.

There is also an international clay court tournament in Bermuda which Volk has competed in for the past three seasons, "Socially, it's just tremendous," Volk said. "It's one of the things we really look forward to.

Current partners DeMoody and Cummings are relative newcomers. For 25 years, Volk teamed with Bart Harvey to score an im-

Starting in the early 1950's, the duo won nine consecutive Baltimore Municipal Men's Doubles Titles, and they won their first Balti-Doubles 11tles, and they won their lifts John more Evening Sun Tournament in 1946. Volk also teamed with Judy Devlin to win the Mu-nicipal Mixed Doubles ten straight times. Although it seems like a busy schedule for a man with a full-time dental practice, the tournaments are not very time-consuming. "Most of them are on weekends, and occasionally some start on Friday," Volk said. "It's just a hobby, a fun thing.

To keep his ranking and prepare for the big tournaments, Volk competes in a regular series of tournaments around Maryland, but weekends could find him playing anywhere from New England to the Carolinas. In most of the tournaments, there are about six teams competing in Volk's age group.

Volk began his tennis career at City College, A Baltimore public high school with a tradition of preparing students for professional careers. At the time, Western Maryland held an annual tennis tournament for area high school players, which gave Terror coach Frank Hurt an opportunity to assess and recruit talent.

Volk won the tourney as a senior, and Hurt, naturally, recruited him. "He encouraged me to come up there," Volk said. Volk played for two years before the United States became involved in World War II, and at one stretch during the 1941 and 1942 seasons, the club had a 24-match winning streak. After a stint with the Army, Volk returned to WMC for his degree and helped the tennis team to records of 9-2 in 1946 and 10-2 in 1947

'I really loved Western Maryland," Volk said. "We had some really good players up there." Players like Bosley "Bo" Baugher, '43, Sigurd "Sig" Jensen, '47, and Alleck Resnick, '47. In those days, Western Maryland would battle big schools like Maryland and Navy, and frequently win.

When Volk came to Western Maryland, he planned a career in athletic coaching, but changed his mind during the war. When he returned, he became a pre-med major, then went on to dental school at the University of Maryland. "Many of my patients are from WMC," Volk said. "We talk about the old

But the switch to dentistry didn't dampen athletic enthusiasm for Volk, who also played basketball for two years on The Hill. "I didn't set the world on fire," he says of his basketball talent

"I still follow most sports," he added. Included are the careers of his two children. Ken, Jr., who is studying to be a veternarian at the University of Pennsylvania, began his lacrosse career at Gilman School in Baltimore. He went on to play two years of lacrosse as an undergraduate at Princeton, but gave it up because of academic demands. He has traded a lacrosse stick for tennis, squash and racquethall rackets

Daughter Beth is pursuing her MBA at the University of Virginia, and prefers horseback riding and skiing to team sports. She is a graduate of Gettysburg College.

Towson, with his wife, Nancy, just south of Towson, with his practice on York Road just north of Baltimore City line. He still follows Green Terror athletic teams and was present for the rededication of the tennis courts last year in the name of Frank Hurt. "We are really good friends," he says of his former mentor.

Volk intends to continue tennis indefinitely. which seems reasonable since Hurt still plays a strong game in his 80's. "The theory in tennis is that you need quick feet for singles, but quick hands for doubles," Volk said.

And for a successful doubles team according to Volk, "it is vital that you have a partner who has a feel for the doubles game." Apparently, his partners feel that way about him.

Athletes Ace Spring Season

While the early season weather r have left something to be desired, the nave left sometring to be desired, the performance of the spring athletic teams at Western Maryland College didn't. Eight of the nine teams registered records of .500 or better.

Perhaps the most gratifying performance was the turn-around of the mance was the turn-around of the baseball team. After struggling through a 7-16-1 campaign in 1981, coach Dave Seibert lead his crew to a 12-8 overall record and an 8-4 mark in the Middle Atlantic Conference's Southwest Section. The Terrors finished the season tied for second with Moravian in league play, but came within two runs of tying Muhlenberg for the title in the sea final doubleheader.

The Terrors swept four doubleheaders this season, a feat they failed to accomplish in 1981. The fine pitching of Mike Gosnell and Steve Antonelli was backed up by the batting of Steve James, John Leibel, Dan Fielder, and Rich Johnson, among others

The softball team, in only its second season, established itself as a competitive force in the MAC. After completing a 4-4 debut, the Terrors recorded an 8-2 season which included a 3-1 record in the MAC Southwest.

in the MAC Southwest.

The highlight of the season was a thrilling, 3-2 win over Gettysburg in an eight-inning contest that coach Carol Fritz called "the greatest game we've ever played." Pitcher Missy Mules complied a 6-2 record, while shortstop Jayne. Kernan, the only senior on the club, generated much of the offense.

First-year men's lacrosse coach Mike Williams went through seven games be-fore suffering a loss. Starting with an opening-day humiliation of Villanova. 19-3, the Terrors made mincemeat of opponents, until falling to a superior ashington College team, 22-7.

The Terrors also lost the last game of the season, 13-7, to Franklin & Mar-shall, costing WMC the MAC West title and ending any playoff hopes. Western Maryland was ranked in the NCAA Division III poll most of the season though, and the defense, which was suspect early in the season, played well in every game.

The turnabout of the women's la crosse team rivaled that of the base ball team. After going 2-7-1 last year, the team rebounded to a 7-4-1 mark.

the team resounded to a 7-4-1 mark. The Terrors avenged losses to Widener and Lebanon Valley while setting a school record for wins in one season.

Goalie Carol Resnick was consistently one of the top five keepers in the MAC. while Pat Donovan. Jane Burch, Lord Rafferty and Betsy Orendorff paced the offense.

The men's tennis team finished the season with eight straight victories en route to an 11-3 record. That's the most wins by a WMC team since 1957, when the Frank Hurt-coached netters the Frank Hulf-coached netters went 15-1. This season also marked the third consecutive time the Terrors have won 10 or more matches in a season. That feat was accomplished only one other time, from 1936-1938.

The doubles team of Brian Kemlage and Ward Street won the final points in the team's last two victories, both 5-4 affairs. One of those wins was against Muhlenberg College, which earned the Terrors a share of first place in the MAC Southwest with Muhlenberg and Franklin & Marshall.

Both track teams performed well in dual meets, but could do no better than tenth in their respective MAC Championships. The men were 5-3-1 in dual meets, with the tie coming with a strong Lebanon Valley team in the season's first meet. One of the losses was to league champ Susquehanna. Dashman Dana Hill had another strong season, while John Hackney and Paul Wallin led a talented contingent of weight throwers. Versatile freshman Mike Broe scored in as many as five events in one meet.

The women were 5-2, and, like the men, lost to Susquehanna and Messiah Middle-distance runner Mary-Lynn Schwaab once again dominated the 800-, and 1500-meter races. Chris Johnson and Sherri Linkoff Jed the dashes, Ann Royston was the top hurd-

he spring athletic season at Western Maryland was greeted with rain, wet snow and cold, gusty breezes. Despite the conditions, though, the college was able to conduct all its home track meets without incident.

The college has progressed quite a bit from the situation just two years ago, when other teams were reluctant to run at WMC even in perfect weather. "It was dangerous to run on." said Terror athletic director Richard Clower of the old cinder track around Hoffa Field. "It was like running in a sand pit."

Today, teams are eager to visit Westminster, now that the college has completed a new allweather track. Home meets, which had dwindled to one or two per season in recent years, are once again frequent, and the college hosted a relay carnival in early April.

During May Weekend, Scott S. Bair Stadium was the site of the Middle Atlantic Conference men's track and field championships. The facility hosted athletes from 18 MAC schools, and Clower and track coach Rick Carpenter heard nothing but praise

We've been getting calls from other athletic directors," said Clower a few days after the MAC's. "Usually when they call after a meet they have a complaint, but all of these calls

they been complimentary."

The main purpose of the track was not to win praise from other colleges, though. "The most important thing about the new track is that it is a total campus facility," said Carpenter. "Now, any member of the cam pus community can run measured distances safely." That means no more twisting an ankle in a gravel rut or slipping on wet cinders.

Another benefit, according to Carpenter, is that the track will "help the marketability of the college. I think good athletic facilities are not just important to the athlete, but to the spectator, also.

An example of how this should work occurred in mid-May, when the Carroll County High School track and field championships were held at Bair Stadium. Even though many of those athletes lack the talent to compete at the college level, they probably came away impressed with the facility and the college

'Finally, the new track will help the quality of our own track and field program," the coach said. "In the past, even though we had a fine program, a number of excellent recruits said our facility had an impact on their decision to attend another school."

Clower agreed, noting that the new facility "certainly should help in attracting studentathletes to Western Maryland.'

Not only is the new track safer, it is faster than the old cinder oval. Faster, in fact, than some new tracks. Many modern tracks, including the one at Johns Hopkins University, contain a rubber-urethane compound which absorbs much of the energy generated when a runner's shoe strikes it.

By contrast, the WMC track has a solid pour urethane surface and "gives back" much of that energy, according to Carpenter. That helps runners run faster, and Jumpers Jump higher and farther. "Solid-pour urethane is the Cadillac of running tracks," Carpenter said. The base of the WMC facility is a two-inch layer of asphalt. Then, two layers of gold liquid urethane were pumped onto the track to a total thickness of three-eighths of an inch. A top-dressing of urethane, pigmentation and sand, was sprayed onto the surface

Pouring the track was a slow, tedious process, as the thick urethane oozed through hoses and onto the asphalt. Each layer had to dry before the next could be applied, and cold temperatures, high winds, and a wet fall delayed completion. The track was opened to runners in early January, although the stadium was dedicated during the season's first home football game in October.

Other track and field facilities in the stadium project included runways for the long and triple jumps and pole vault. Provisions were made to hold these events in either directions, as weather dictates, since even a light breeze would render records meaningless under track and field rules. There is also a pit for the high jump and three areas for throwing events (i.e. javelin, shot put and discus)

Another distinctive feature of the facility is a course for the grueling steeplechase. This 3,000 meter contest includes a water hazard and wooden jumps, similar to the equestrian event bearing the same name. Irwin Cohen. the successful track and field coach at Northeastern University in Boston, once termed the race "an event designed by a sadist to be run by a masochist.'

As a final feature, the new track brings Western Maryland into the metric age with its 400-meter distance. That's important if the college wishes to host a national event sometime in the near future. "Somewhere down the pike," Clower said, "we might be able to host an NCAA (National Collegiate Athletic Association) or AIAW (Association of Inter collegiate Athletic for Women) Division III national championship."

design of the stadium and track and moni-tored construction almost daily through the spring and summer of 1981. "We're pretty pleased with the way things worked out" said

I really think it is one of the finest tracks in the country right now." Clower said.

Despite reaching the .500 mark, the squad was 20th of 21 teams in the MAC Championships. It was one of the poorer championships it was one of the poorer showings in an inconsistent season. Ironically, the Terrors had low medalist in almost every match, but couldn't get help from more than one or two players neip from more than one or two players in each contest. Furthermore, there were four different WMC medalists through the season—Todd Lowe, John Dixon, Bill Dulaney and Bill Morley. Only the women's tennis team failed to break even, finishing at 3-6. But with only two of the top six players returning, the record doesn't seem as bad. Helga Hein, the only senior on the team, was the top singles player, while sophomore Becky Bankert moved from sixth to fourth on the ladder.

Four freshmen and a sophomore new-comer battled to fill out the top seven Tracey Serratelli was number two. Diane Hernandez number three and Marchelle remandez number three and Marchale Creager number five. Cornelia Freeman and Sue Cooke alternated at the sixth position. Swimmers 8th in Nationals

With only a dozen swimmers on the women's team WMC swimming coach Kim Easterday wasn't quite sure what to expect at the beginning of the sea-son. The quality was there, but were there enough swimmers for a successful season?

The women went undefeated and finished second in the Middle Atlantic

Conference Championships, then went on to even greater heights at the NCAA Division III Swimming and Diving Championships in Boston, finishing eighth in the first NCAA-sponsored omen's swimming event.

Any discussion of swimming at WMC Any discussion of swimming at WMC inevitably begins with Denise Frech, a junior from Catonsville, Md. She has accumulated 12 all-America honors in three seasons, including five this year. She was named all-America in the 50-100-, and 200-yard breaststroke events. and was honored for swimming a leg of both the 200- and 400-yard medley

Since both the NCAA and AIAW hosted national championships this year, it took some doing to find out who would be named all-America. Ultimately, it was determined that the top 16 or 18 swimmers overall, based on comparative times, would be honored.

While Frech was second in both the 50- and 100-yard breaststroke in the NCAA meet, she was second overall in the 50 and third overall in the 100.

Her time in the 200-yard breaststroke was third best in the NCAA meet, but sixth best overall.

such best overall.

The eighth-place national finish by Western Maryland is a step up from the 21st-place finish of a year ago and the 40th-place finish two years ago. Success should continue for Easterday, with only two seniors graduating. Butterfly specialist Lisa Rieven, who helped the 200-yard medley relay to a fifth-place finish in the NCAM meet, will be the key loss. The Wilmar, Minn. native, was twice named all-America. Frech will be joined by one other junior on next year's team backstroke specialist Sue Lapidus. The Abington, Pa. native swam in four relay events in the nationals and was one of the co-captains.

There was a host of freshman talent on the team, and that should mean a strong future. Distance swimmer Mary Theresa Lurz won numerous races throughout the season, and placed well in two individual events at the NCAA meet.—E.M.

Westminster's "Golden Boy" Tastes Fame By Laura Cole, '85

"It's kind of like 'Roots' coming back here," mused one-time Westminster boy Ernest Thompson before an Alumni Hall audience in mid-March.

Upon request by Del Palmer, professor of comparative literature, and through sponsorship of the Department of Dramatic Art and College Activities, the author of On Golden Pond returned to Westminster to spend one day remarking on his present life and past memories.

As he leaned upon the Mainstage podium, dressed in a tie, tweed Jacket, designer jeans and boots, the 32-year-old writer spoke with a striking blend of reticence and aggressive confidence. He talked about his late father. Theron Thompson, retired professor of education at Western Maryland College.

"When I walk across the campus, I feel his ghost follow me," commented Thompson of his late father. His father's association with WMC originally brought Ernest from Vermont to Westminster in 1962. "When my father said we were moving to Maryland, I expected to see plantations," he laughed.

As his talk continued, Ernest explained that he received speaker's pay from WMC for his visit. But he quickly mentioned having a motive for accepting payment. In front of a surprised audience, Thompson returned the $2,000 paycheck to Raiph C. John, president, and added from his own pocket another check for $3,000. He stated that the money should be used in memory of his late father. Theron Thompson.

After studying drama at several universities, Thompson graduated from American University in 1971. He found work acting in soap operas and on a couple of television series for a while. "I decided I wanted to be a playwright after I had been out of work as an actor for two years," he admitted.

In 1978, Thompson's play, On Golden

Pond. hit Broadway and was a success. At the age of 28. Thompson had accomplished what some writers, 20 years or better his elder, are still struggling to do. Thompson jokingly connects part of the play's success with the fact that the newspapers, along with their crities, were on strike when the play opened.

On Golden Pond tells of a summer spent at the cottage of an elderly couple. Norman (Henry Fonda) and Ethel (Katharine Hepburn) Thayer. The play deals with the problems of aging, the generation gap, and reconciliation between Norman and his daughter (Jane Fonda).

Thompson presently has two plays on tour. "The Westside Waltz" starring Katharine Hepburn. and "A Sense of Humor." a story about the parents of a 25-year-old daughter who committed suicide. Thompson borrowed the last name of the main character in "West-side Waltz." Mary Martin Elderdice. If main borothy Elderdice. 'Il. who he recalled as "a neighbor and a force" in his life. He is also working on a novel which he says will in many ways reflect the city of Westminster.
